The Barbara and Lawrence Fleischman Theater at the Getty Villa

Thursdays–Saturdays, September 4–27, 2014
The performance is approximately ninety minutes long. There is no intermission.

As a courtesy to our neighbors, we ask that you keep noise to a minimum while enjoying the production. Please refrain from unnecessarily loud or prolonged applause, shouting, whistling, or any other intrusive conduct during the performance. While exiting the theater and the Getty Villa following the performance, please do so quietly.

This theater operates under an agreement between the League of Resident Theatres and Actors’ Equity Association.

Director Anne Bogart is a member of SDC, the Society of Stage Directors and Choreographers, an independent national labor union.

This version of Persians, by Aeschylus, was translated, with an introduction and notes, by Aaron Poochigian from Persians, Seven against Thebes, and Suppliants, pp. 1–41. © 2011 Johns Hopkins University Press. This production was arranged with the permission of Johns Hopkins University Press.

When Persians won first place in 472 B.C. at the Athenian festival of Dionysos, Aeschylus was perhaps in his early fifties, a conservative master of plays integrating complex poetry, song, and dance. He was also an innovator; according to Aristotle, he introduced the second actor to tragic performance. In this opulent drama seen through the eyes of Persian courtiers, Aeschylus combined visual spectacle with powerful, lyrical storytelling. Persians is a challenge to translate and interpret because of its alien grandeur and despair. Yet it is well worth the effort to see the play through ancient eyes as well as our own.

This tragedy was admired in antiquity and selected as a model to be copied and recopied, but two accidents of history also give it special significance. Firstly, as the earliest play to survive, Persians takes us as far back as we can now reach to the origins of Greek theater. Singing takes up almost half the story and echoes archaic performances in honor of Dionysus before the first actor stepped from the chorus.

Secondly, Persians is the only historically based play (of the few known) to survive. Its focus is the Battle of Salamis, won by the Greeks against an overwhelming Persian naval force in 480 B.C., eight years before the play was produced. Aeschylus himself fought the Persians, and probably took part in this battle. While he glorified the victors, he also universalized the horrors and lessons of a specific war by presenting Persians alongside three mythological plays—each standing alone, or all perhaps linked thematically to a Persian threat.

The larger theme, not historically accurate, is the utter devastation of Persian civilization by the Athenians. The sorrow of the Persian courtiers, as they first fear and then confirm that all is lost, slowly escalates into an ancient ritual dirge. The dramatic gestures and cries of the chorus and Xerxes may seem excessive today, but to the play’s first audience, public lament was a familiar expression of profound communal sorrow. Aeschylus effectively shows the stricken enemies’ point of view, and thereby permits viewers to share in a collective grief that bridges time, culture, and place.

In this translation, I strove to preserve the musicality and rhythmic virtuosity of Aeschylus' original. In order to make clear their distinct qualities, I translated the spoken passages into blank verse and the sung passages into rhymed or off-rhymed verse. The most common dialogue meter is called iambic trimeter in Greek prosody. Aristotle describes its rhythm as very close to everyday speech, so the iambic pentameter of Shakespeare was the natural choice to bring it across into English. The formal elements which comprise a choral ode are stanzas called strophe, antistrophe, and epode (or, in Theodore Roethke’s phrase, “the Turn, and Counter-turn and Stand”). The metrical pattern for each antistrophe is identical or nearly identical to its strophe. I resolved to preserve this metrical responsion by using the same scheme of meter and rhyme for each set and by distinguishing each set with a different scheme. Rhyme, it seemed, was necessary to indicate that the choral odes are not conversational speech but song. The resulting translation is a musical experience that modulates, as the original does, between spoken and sung lines of verse.

— Aaron Poochigian

Aeschylus's Persians dates from 472 B.C. and is considered to be the first extant play of western civilization. As a company, we are attracted to the play not only for its historical significance and remarkable embodiment of a Greek society imagining the grief and sorrow of their recently defeated enemy, the Persians, but also to the fact that the protagonist of the play may, in fact, be the chorus. According to Aristotle, tragedy, as we know it today, evolved from a popular performance tradition, a form of sacred choral singing and dancing called dithyramb. In approaching Persians, we are attempting to chart nothing less than the birth of drama, the proverbial big bang of the theater, from procession and ritual celebration to acts of fictional embodiment of events and relationships.

SITI Company was built on the bedrock of ensemble. Founded in 1992 by Tadashi Suzuki, Anne Bogart, and a group of like-minded artists, the company began as an agreement to redefine and revitalize contemporary theater in the United States through an emphasis on training and international cultural exchange. SITI Company believes that a group of artists working together over time can have a significant impact upon both contemporary theater and the world at large. Through performances, educational programs, and collaborations with other artists and thinkers, SITI Company will continue to challenge the status quo, train to achieve artistic excellence in every aspect of their work, and strive to foster an interaction of art, artists, audiences, and ideas to inspire the possibility for change, optimism, and hope.

In addition to Co-Artistic Directors Anne Bogart, Leon Ingulsrud, and Ellen Lauren, SITI Company is comprised of eight actors, four designers, and one playwright.

The Getty Villa’s public programming enhances the experience of the ancient world by offering a diverse schedule of events anchored by an innovative theater program. Live performances of classical drama offer insight into the social, cultural, and political realities of life in ancient Greece and Rome. The J. Paul Getty Museum’s permanent collection of antiquities, alongside its changing exhibitions, strengthens the connection between modern audiences and the stories enacted in the tragedies and comedies onstage.

Classical dramatists explored basic human stories that often parallel our contemporary experiences. Ancient plays are ever powerful and resonant, continuing to inspire reinterpretation. The Villa Theater Lab series, presented throughout the year in the Auditorium, fosters experimental and modern approaches to ancient stories, enabling directors, designers, musicians, playwrights, and actors to freely incorporate advanced stage, sound, and visual elements into productions developed in residence at the Villa.

Each September a major production is commissioned and presented in the Barbara and Lawrence Fleischman Theater, an outdoor performance space based on ancient prototypes. In recent years, the outdoor classical theater has been the setting for Euripides’ Hippolytos, Plautus’s Tug of War, the Agamemnon of Aeschylus, Aristophanes’ Peace (via Culture Clash), Sophokles’ Elektra, SITI Company’s original adaptation of Trojan Women (after Euripides), the Playwrights’ Arena production of Helen, and Aeschylus’s Prometheus Bound by CalArts Center for New Performance in association with Trans Arts. These performances have become a much-anticipated end-of-summer tradition for Museum audiences, and plans are already well underway for a new version of Medea in 2015 titled Mojada: A Medea in Los Angeles by Luis Alfaro.

The Villa’s public programming also includes performances of music and dance, film screenings, and family festivals. Mojada: A Medea in Los Angeles

A new adaptation by Luis Alfaro
Based on Euripides’s Medea
Directed by Jessica Kubzansky
Produced by The Theatre @ Boston Court
Opening September 10, 2015

From MacArthur Fellow and critically acclaimed author of Electricidad and Oedipus el Rey, Mojada is a breathtaking reimagining of Euripides’s Medea transported to East Los Angeles. In an epic journey of border crossings, Medea, a seamstress with extraordinary skill, runs from a past of betrayals. With husband Jason and their son in tow, our storied heroine’s struggle to adapt takes a disastrous turn when old and new worlds meet in the City of Angels. Alfaro’s gripping contemporary take on the ancient Greek myth tackles the complexities of family, tradition, culture, and the explosive moment when they all collide.
