1. This picture was identified by A.E. Pérez Sánchez in "Las colecciones de pintura del Conde de Monterrey (1653)," Boletin de la Real Academia de la Historia (1977), pp.417-459, as the Venetian sixteenth-century Conversation of the Marchese di Pescara (Fig. 52) in the Prado (526). It appears again in the two other Conde de Monterrey documents included in this publication: see Doc. 57, no. 21 and Doc. 61, no. 9.

The postmortem inventory of Jerónimo de Villanueva<sup>1</sup> (Madrid 1594–Zaragoza 1653), knight of the Order of Calatrava and comendador of Santibañez, was drawn up by his nephew, Don Gerónimo de Villanueva, Knight of Alcántara. The inventory of Villanueva's moveable goods (bienes muebles) was taken in his house in Madrid on the calle de la Madera, and began with his collection of paintings inventoried between 26 and 27 August 1653.

Thanks to his father, Agustín de Villanueva (Doc. 6), Villanueva began his court career in minor posts in the secretariats of Aragón and Mallorca; he inherited his post of Protonotario de la Corona de Aragón on the death of his father. Recruited into the regime of the Conde-Duque de Olivares and knighted in 1626, Villanueva became his secretary as well as one of his closest confidants and most loyal ministers. Rapidly rising at court, he was the most powerful man of the regime after the válido himself: Secretario del Despacho between 1627–43, in direct contact with both the king and Olivares, and from 1630–43 the first Secretario de Estado para España, a post suppressed in 1643. On Olivares's disgrace in 1643 Villanueva fell from power and was imprisoned in 1644 for two years. News of his arrest was said to have precipitated Olivares' death. Villanueva retired to Zaragoza in August 1647, where he died on 21 July 1653. His last will and testament was drawn up in Zaragoza on 22 July.<sup>2</sup> His body was returned to Madrid and buried in the convent of San Plácido.

Villanueva founded the Benedictine convent of La Encarnación Benita de San Plácido in Madrid in 1623, which nuns entered in May 1624. Scandal surrounded the convent almost from the time of its foundation. The prioress, Teresa Valle de la Cerda, had been betrothed to Villanueva, and a love affair between them was widely suspected. Legend has it that Olivares and Villanueva facilitated Philip IV's affair with a nun of the convent, even perfuming the cell in which they made love. San Plácido was certainly the focus of investigations into illicit forms of heterodoxical worship in 1628, although Villanueva's power at court meant that no action was taken against him. The Inquisitorial accusations against Villanueva in the process of 1644 included his having a pact with the devil and "having had him painted in a certain form in his house".<sup>3</sup> In expiation of his sins, he may have commissioned Velázquez's Crucifixion (Madrid, Museo del Prado) for the convent around 1632.<sup>4</sup> He also spent 66,000 reales on appointing the convent, including paintings, and he put some of his own paintings at the disposal of the nuns.<sup>5</sup> Villanueva also had Rubens make a sketch for the high altar while he was in Madrid in 1628–29.<sup>6</sup>

Villanueva was most conspicuous in the cultural life of the court through his enthusiastic participation in the building of the Buen Retiro palace. In his capacity as keeper of the king's secret expense account, he was intimately involved with financing its construction and decoration; his interest in the progress and decoration of the palace was such that he could frequently be found wandering around the building at midnight or dawn.<sup>7</sup> Possessing great private wealth, he also contributed money and other gifts from his own pocket and was an assiduous patron of plays and entertainments at the new palace.<sup>8</sup> He seems to have been personally interested in the decoration of the Salón de los Reinos, which was said to be the result of his "care ... desire ... prudence ... [and] hard work". He added his personal touch to the ensemble with 12 silver lions rampant bearing the arms of Aragón, which cost no less than 24,000 ducats. On Villanueva's fall with Olivares in 1643, these were melted down for the war effort.<sup>9</sup>

Some of Villanueva's 150 paintings were inherited from his father's collection. The inventory of 1653 listed Agustín de Villanueva's still-life painting (no. 65) and genre painting of the fruitseller (no. 69). While no new genre pictures had been added to the collection, there were more still lifes and flower paintings, which testifies to the great popularity of these genres at court from 1620. Villanueva also bought paintings at the estate auction of the Duc d'Aarschot on 2 October 1641: a Resurrection of Christ and a Magdalene Washing Christ's Feet in the House of Simon, a scene from classical history of Mucius Scaevola, and two still lifes.<sup>10</sup> It is likely that these pictures were all Flemish works, since they were listed among the paintings sent from Flanders that arrived after Aarschot's death (see Doc. 30).

Although Villanueva's paintings are anonymous in the inventory of 1653, the subject matter of some of them parallels the decoration of the Buen Retiro's Sal6n de los Reinos and perhaps reflects his personal involvement in this effort. Eight landscapes with subjects from the story of Hercules (no. 7) are reminiscent of Francisco de Zurbar6n's Labors of Hercules for the Sal6n (Madrid, Museo del Prado). In a 1663 inventory of goods from the estate of Martina Ferrer de Valenzuela (d. 1657) and Villanueva's namesake, nephew, and executor, Don Jer6nimo de Villanueva, Marqu6s de Villalba and Protonotario de Arag6n, these paintings headed the list of pictures, where they were described as "eight landscapes of the labors of Hercules and Dejanaira."<sup>11</sup> The only attributed pictures in this later inventory were two portraits of the "Dukes of Florence" by Tintoretto.<sup>12</sup>

Villanueva also owned a portrait series that appears to have included versions or copies of Vel6zquez's royal equestrian portraits of Philip III, Queen Margarita, Philip IV, Queen Isabella, and their son Prince Baltasar Carlos which presided over the Sal6n de los Reinos (all now in the Museo del Prado). There were two equestrian portraits of Philip IV and Queen Isabella that measured some 106 x 126 cm. (no. 45), and an equestrian portrait of Prince Baltasar Carlos (no. 9) of the same size. There was also a larger portrait of this prince (no. 46), which measured some 168 x 196 cm. Two slightly larger equestrian portraits of Philip III and Queen Margarita (no. 85) measured some 168 x 210 cm. Another equestrian portrait of the same size represented the Infante-Cardinal Don Ferdinand (no. 86). Two slightly smaller portraits of Philip IV and Queen Isabella might also have been equestrian portraits (nos. 87). There was a smaller portrait of the Conde-Duque de Olivares on a horse (no. 89). The size of this picture, some 106 x 126 cm., suggests that Villanueva's painting was similar to Juan Bautista del Mazo's Equestrian Portrait of the Conde-Duque de Olivares (102 x 125 cm.) in the Metropolitan Museum, New York. This portrait, which is a version of Vel6zquez's equestrian portrait of Olivares in the Prado Museum, was cited in the collection of the Marqu6s de Eliche in 1651. It is entirely fitting that Villanueva's collection should have contained a portrait of the patron with whom his own destiny was inextricably bound.

The postmortem inventory of Luis Fernández de Vega (d.23 March 1654), contador in the Consejo de Indias, was drawn up by his widow, Sebastiana de Mendizabel, in Madrid from 24 March 1654. The inventoried paintings were valued on 15 April 1654 by the royal painter Angelo Nardi, whose attributions followed those of the inventory exactly. This was essentially a collection of religious paintings; some of the works of comparatively low value were probably of more devotional than aesthetic importance. By far the most valuable painting was an Immaculate Conception by the royal painter of Italian extraction, Eugenio Caxés (no. 2), and Nardi's high valuation of this work suggests sincere admiration for the qualities of his colleague's art. Two pictures by Pedro de Orrente were also valued at appreciable sums (nos. 3, 8), as was an anonymous "original" Last Supper (no. 4), whose value may also have reflected the large number of figures required to represent such a subject. The only paintings of secular subjects listed in the collection were four coppers of battles (no. 25) and a set of 18 heads of Roman emperors (no. 23), which were of negligible value and, if not inherited, were probably acquired much earlier in the century. However, the 17 small paintings on metal depicting hermit saints in landscapes were examples of a type of devotional painting that never went out of fashion throughout the seventeenth century.

Leonor María de Guzmán Condesa de Fuentes and Condesa de Monterrey

The valuation of the estate of Doña Leonor Maria de Guzman, Condesa de Monterrey, widow of Manuel de Fonseca y Zúñiga, Conde de Monterrey y de Fuentes, was drawn up by administrator of her estate Don Miguel de Salamanca “del Consejo y juez probabivio de Su Mag.<sup>d</sup>,” beginning Madrid 15 February 1655. The paintings (ff. 861–866v) were appraised by Antonio Pereda.

Many of the works can be traced back to the inventory or valuation of Monterrey’s husband (Docs. 57 and 58), though with some items described slightly differently. For example, Giuseppe Cesari (Cavalier d’Arpino)’s drawing of two angels in the 1653 inventory (Doc. 57, no. 96) is changed to two figures of Icarus in the subsequent valuation (Doc. 58, no. 99), but changed back to angels here (no. 35).

1. This picture was identified by A.E. Pérez Sánchez in "Las colecciones de pintura del Conde de Monterrey (1653)," Boletín de la Real Academia de la Historia (1977), pp.417-459, as the Venetian sixteenth-century Conversation of the Marchese di Pescara (Fig. 52) in the Prado (526). It appears again in the two other Conde de Monterrey documents included in this publication: see Doc. 57, no. 21 and Doc. 58, no. 18.

In a codicil to his will drawn up in Madrid on 11 May 1655, the silversmith Andrés de Villarroel identified himself by royal titles, as platero de cámara del Rey and tasador de sus reales joyas. Rather than referring to a salaried court position, these distinctions probably derived from professional services to the Crown rendered during Villarroel's career, akin to the English "By appointment to Her Majesty," and must have been the source of considerable pride and prestige among the artisan community in the capital.

Villarroel was a witness of the valuation of the collection of Gaspar de Ledesma Meriño (Doc. 4), at whose sale he bought pictures, and may have been connected with the latter's son, also called Gaspar de Ledesma Meriño and also a silversmith.

Villarroel appended to his codicil an inventory and appraisal of his goods, which recorded a small picture collection of some 43 paintings whose values were set by the owner himself, probably in relation to the prices he originally paid for the works ("de los precios mas ajustados y moderados que yo alcanço sin esajeracion alguna"). He owned a Virgin and Child based on a prototype by Titian (no. 11) whose value, 30 ducats, probably reflects its high quality. While Villarroel's collection was not large by the standards of others included in this volume, he seems to have enjoyed the painting of the court painter Pedro Núñez del Valle (ca. 1590/94–ca. 1654), 14 of whose works he owned. Villarroel identified all of these paintings as "originals" by Núñez del Valle, which could suggest that he had himself ordered them directly from the artist. They included examples from the full range of his painting, comprising religious subjects, mythological subjects in landscape settings, a pair of allegories of love, and landscape paintings, including a view of Madrid and another of Rome. Pedro Núñez had lived and worked in Rome, where he is documented in 1613, and it is conceivable that he may have begun painting figure subjects in landscape settings in the manner of northern artists working there. A landscape with ruins by Paul Bril? (no. 4) confirms Villarroel's taste for such paintings, although the document also lists one by Pedro Orrente (no. 5), who worked in the style of the Bassani.

Villarroel owned six fruit still lifes by Juan van der Hamen (1596–1631), the artist who had dominated the genre at court during the 1620s. These were also designated as "originals," which therefore distinguished them from the workshop versions and copies of his works that satisfied the demand from less discerning collectors than Villarroel. While two depicted baskets of fruit (no. 9), and were, uncharacteristically, framed in white frames, three other paintings represented fruit on small silver plates, a subject that would have been of considerable appeal to a collector of Villarroel's profession.

Don Miguel de Salamanca (d. 7 March 1658), knight of Santiago, came to prominence during the reign of Philip IV. He had been inspector of the army of Flanders and in 1638 entered the service of the Cardinal-Infante Don Ferdinand in Flanders as political and military advisor; his picture collection contained a full-length portrait of the cardinal-infante in military uniform by Gaspar de Crayer (no. 17). Salamanca undertook diplomatic embassies in the north on behalf of the Conde-Duque de Olivares, and in Madrid rose to become a member of the Councils of War (Consejo de Guerra) and Royal Treasury (Consejo de Hacienda). In his collection, Salamanca owned a small portrait of Olivares said to be painted by Velázquez himself (no. 27), and three copies of Velázquez portraits of the royal family: Philip IV, Queen Isabella of Borbon, and the Infante Baltasar Carlos (no. 18).

Don Miguel de Salamanca began the inventory of his goods in Madrid two days after the death of his wife Costanza Pardo (d. 2 April 1655). An inventory of the family collection at their seat at Burgos, made on 15 June 1655, comprised religious subjects and many tempera paintings, some of which were described as "old and damaged". The valuation of Salamanca's paintings was undertaken on 12 June 1655 by Juan Carreño de Miranda, the artist from whom he commissioned a painting of St. Anthony of Padua for his chapel in the Convento de Capuchins in Madrid.<sup>1</sup>

It would appear that Salamanca's taste for Flemish art, as well as the bulk of his picture collection, was acquired during his time in Flanders. A painting by Jan van Eyck (no. 6), which was a gift on Salamanca's marriage, and one by Albrecht Dürer he had inherited (no. 7), were to remain as part of his estate, as was a painting attributed to Raphael (no. 5). In the inventory of 1655, the precision of the attributions, particularly to Flemish hands, is remarkable. Indeed, the detail of this document must reflect Salamanca's supervision. Although the appraiser of the collection, Juan Carreño de Miranda, was one of the most reliable connoisseurs among painter-appraisers, all the attributions of the appraisal document follow those of the inventory. Salamanca's postmortem inventory of 11 March 1658, broadly followed that of 1655, but with the significant difference that there were considerably fewer attributed paintings in the later document.<sup>2</sup> One important addition to the collection after 1655 is recorded in the later inventory; these were 106 Flemish paintings on copper in ebony frames, whose subject matter was unspecified.

Salamanca possessed a remarkable set of large paintings of founders of religious orders which were the result of collaboration among three Flemish artists: Gaspar de Crayer painting the figures, Lodewickj de Vadder the landscapes, and another hand the still-life elements. A reference to their importation from Flanders is to be found in the Libros de paso dated 30 January 1647 in which they were described as 18 "Pinturas de los fundadores de las Relixiones," accompanied by a painting of the Virgin.<sup>3</sup> An additional painting of the Spanish saint St. Peter Nolasco was a copy by Juan Carreño de Miranda of an original composition by Eugenio Caxés (no. 1). Remarkably, this was one of the very few Spanish artists identified in the collection. Salamanca also appears to have employed an unknown Spanish artist, Diego de Leiva, to complete a series of Roman paintings of the Virtues (nos. 19).

The majority of the attributions in the document were to Flemish masters. Although Salamanca owned a large painting of the Virgin by Daniel Seghers (no. 3), perhaps original paintings by the greatest Flemish painters were beyond his means. The inventory listed five copies of compositions by Rubens, four of which were mythological subjects and one subject from classical history (no. 9), as well as two images of the Virgin copied from paintings by Anthony van Dyck (nos. 2 and 4).

Salamanca's nine animal and bird paintings by Frans Snyders testify to the abiding popularity of such subjects by this master among upper-class collectors in Madrid (nos. 8 and 13). Salamanca's Flemish flower paintings were also typical of the taste for such expensive imports by northern specialists among collectors at the Spanish court, including the king himself, and which led the Spanish flower painter Juan de Arellano to exploit this market with his own versions of Flemish prototypes. Two of Salamanca's flowerpieces were original and highly valued collaborative festoon paintings by Daniel Seghers and Frans Ijckens (no. 14), and there was a flowerpiece on copper by Seghers (no. 20). Another festoon with a scene of the Rape of Europa was a copy of a Seghers original by Cornelis Schut (no. 15), while three further examples of Seghers pictures in the collection were anonymous copies (nos. 24, 25) and there was a copy of a festoon by Brueghel (no. 16). Five of these paintings appear to have formed a set, the canvas of the Brueghel copy even folded over to make it the same size as the four other flowerpieces (nos. 13–15). Two paintings of flowers in Talavera pots were probably Spanish pictures (no. 29). Salamanca's collection also contained Flemish landscape paintings, the most distinguished of which were two by the specialist Joos de Momper (nos. 12 and 31).

On the death of Isabel Núñez, wife of the silk merchant Francisco Díaz de la Hoz, he drew up an inventory and valuation of their estate, beginning on 5 January 1656. The collection of paintings was valued on 30 January by the painter Miguel Ximénez (ff. 21–22v).

The size of this collection, some 65 items in all, compares to the size of the collection of the textile merchant Cruzat y Villanueva, who owned 67 pictures in 1659 (Doc. 70). A wide range of subjects was represented; there were landscapes with mythological subjects (no. 4), mythologies painted onto mirrors (no. 30), a painting of Troy (no. 9), a Neapolitan seascape (no. 12), flowerpieces (no. 8), and still lifes (no. 5, 11, 16).

The appraisal was headed by the most valuable painting in the collection, Alonso Cano's Christ of the Passion with an angel (no. 1). This picture may have been of a type representing a dead Christ with an angel, which is known in two versions by Cano now in the Prado Museum, Madrid. The theme of Christ's passion was well represented in the collection, with no less than three versions of the Ecce Homo (nos. 2, 15, 18) and a Crown of Thorns (no. 24). The only other attributed works were a painting of Christ by the contemporary court painter Francisco Rizi (no. 6), and two copies after Italian paintings of the previous century. One of these was copied after Bassano's Crowning with Thorns (no. 24), probably following the famous and widely copied night scene in the royal collection at the Escorial. The other was a copy after Correggio's Mystic Marriage of St. Catherine (no. 7), one of his best-known paintings.

Condesa de Benavente

The inventory and valuation of the estate of Doña Leonor María Pimentel, Condesa de Benavente (d. 31 January 1656), widow of Antonio Alfonso Pimentel, Conde de Benavente, were drawn up by her nephew, Don Enrique Enríquez de Guzmán Pimentel y Toledo, Conde de Alba, Marqués de Tavera gentilhombre de la cámara de Su Majestad y Presidente en el Real Consejo de las ordenes, beginning in Madrid 31 January 1656. The paintings were appraised on 23 March 1656 by Juan Pérez, “master painter and a resident of this Villa [de Madrid].” A sale followed, 2 May 1656 and thereafter. Some paintings were sold to Don Claudio Pimentel after the public sale of goods from the estate, and others were received in deposit by the nephew, the Marqués de Tavera, at Madrid on 21 April 1656 and 31 December 1656.

For her husband’s inventory, see Document 55.

The postmortem inventory of Don Arthanasio Jiménez de Arellano (d. 7 August 1657), a Knight of the Order of Calatrava and the fiscal in the Consejo de las Órdenes, was drawn up by his widow D<sup>a</sup> Feliciana de Aedo y Vega. In the valuation of his estate (ff. 527–577v) the paintings were appraised by the painter Santiago Morán on 21 August 1657 (ff. 548–555v).

Jiménez de Arellano owned copies in lieu of originals by two of the most famous Spanish artists, Pedro de Orrente and Jusepe de Ribera. Three copies after philosophers by Ribera (no. 11), valued at 132 reales each, were listed along with two further paintings of philosophers in pearwood frames worth 3,000 reales, but inventoried anonymously (no. 10). Four paintings of the Creation of the World by an unidentified artist, “Rodela” (no. 25), which would be of considerable interest if known today, set the theme of nature as God’s creation. Other paintings in the collection could be seen as further celebrations of this fact, such as allegories of the Four Elements (no. 8), still lifes (nos. 6, 7, 23) and landscapes. However, the collection reflects a taste for landscape pictures, which probably owed as much to the decorative appeal of this genre as any deeper significance. Four of the first five paintings of the appraisal were a set of four landscapes with Old Testament subjects (nos. 1 and 3–5) and, although these were not valuable works, they found an echo in two copies after Pedro Orrente of the stories of Rachel and Balaam (nos. 19, 24). Six landscapes listed by “Cristobal” are more likely to have been works by Cristobál de Azevedo than Cristobál Vargas, nicknamed “El Sevillano” (nos. 20, 27), and there were a further ten landscapes listed anonymously (nos. 21, 26). The painting of the Month of September copied after Orrente probably also depicted figures involved in rural activities in a landscape (no. 18). While a painting of Paul the Hermit (no. 8) represented nature as a religious retreat, a painting of a shepherd and shepherdess (no. 26) perhaps extolled the more purely pleasurable dimension of the countryside celebrated in classical and contemporary literature.

Ana Enríquez de Cabrera y Colonna, Duquesa de Alburquerque

The inventory of Doña Ana Enríquez de Cabrera y Colonna, 7th Duquesa (dowager) de Alburquerque,<sup>1</sup> was drawn up by her sons, Don Baltasar de la Cueva y Enríquez and Don Joseph de la Cueva y Enríquez, at Madrid, beginning 4 September 1658. The paintings were appraised by Angelo Nardi on 17 September 1658.

Alburquerque was the third wife of Francisco Fernández de la Cueva, 7th Duke of Alburquerque. She was the daughter of Doña Vittoria Colonna, Duquesa de Medina de Rioseco, and of the 8th Almirante de Castilla. She and her husband are listed as beneficiaries of the 1634 death inventory of her mother (see Doc. 18).

It is possible that the collection contained works that had previously belonged to her mother, but since almost all of the paintings in both inventories were left anonymous, it is difficult to make direct comparisons. The vast majority of the paintings in the present document depicted religious themes, and just one carried the name of its author, a painting of St. Jerome attributed to Eugenio Caxés valued at 660 reales. The most valuable items, however, although anonymous, were listed at the head of the inventory. The first item, a painting of Christ carrying the Cross, was valued at 2200 reales. Item no.9, described as including fourteen paintings of Narcissus, Europa, and various allegorical figures, was valued at 4200 reales. These were among the few secular subjects found in the collection.

The postmortem inventory of Don Francisco de Galaretta Osarez, a knight of the Order of Santiago and secretary of the Consejo de Guerra, was drawn up by his widow Claudia de Lira, beginning in Madrid on 8 March 1659. The collection of paintings was valued by the painter Matías Pastor on 22 March (ff. 334v–340).

Because Galaretta Osarez was secretary of the Council of War, some pictures in his portrait collection represented key individuals in Spanish foreign policy in the Netherlands. These included the Conde-Duque de Olivares (no. 27), the Cardinal-Infante Ferdinand (no. 40), the governor of the Netherlands, Francisco de Moncada, 3rd Marqués de Aytona, (no. 31), Alonso Pérez de Vivero, 3rd Conde de Fuensaldaña and Gobernador de las armas del rey in Flanders (no. 28), and the commander-in-chief of the Spanish Army of Flanders Ambrosio Spínola, 1st Marqués de los Balbases (no. 29). In this context, it is also easy to understand the attraction to Galaretta Osarez of his series of 12 tempera paintings of battles and sieges (no. 20) and perhaps the two ship paintings (nos. 59, 61).

The only attributed paintings were both copies, one a Virgin and Child with many angels after Van Dyck (no. 53) and another copy after a portrait of Charles V by Titian (no. 22). Galaretta Osarez owned a number of paintings of religious subjects with festoons and garlands of flowers (nos. 8, 9, 16, 66), which appear to have become more popular in the second half of the century. He also enjoyed the secular genres of flower painting (nos. 51, 57) and still lifes (no. 47, 62). A number of the paintings were genre pictures with figures, listed as bodegones with fish (no. 33) and crab (no. 41), and a vegetable stall (no. 35). A pair of paintings represented a fisherman and vegetable vendor (nos. 45, 46). One painting of an old man signified Winter (no. 67). Only one painting, however, was explicitly described as a mythological subject (no. 54).

In 1659, the textile merchant (mercader de paños) Antonio Cruzat y Villanueva married Luisa de Aguilar; since this was his second marriage, he drew up an inventory of the capital assets he brought to the union on 10 May 1659. This document included an appraisal of his collection of nearly 70 paintings, with their values noted in reales and maravedises, but without any mention of the name of an artist-appraiser.

Apart from Cruzat y Villanueva's set of 20 Neapolitan landscapes (no. 13), his entire collection comprised paintings with religious subjects. (The subjects of three paintings were unspecified, nos. 15, 16.) No fewer than 20 of the pictures were listed as Roman works (nos. 5, 9, 11, 14, 15, 16, 18, 20); since the majority of these were small paintings on copper and metal supports, they may easily have been acquired as imports on the Madrid art market. The only attributed paintings listed were by Alonso Cano (nos. 2, 8), an artist represented in the collections of other members of the merchant community at court. Cano's painting of St. Catherine (no. 2) was the most valuable picture in the collection. While two further paintings were distinguished as "originals" (no. 3), their authorship was not specified.

The postmortem inventory of Doctor Don Pedro Pacheco (d. 23 July 1662), a Councilor of Castille since 1634 and member of the Consejo General de Inquisición, began on 23 July 1662, and was drawn up by colleagues in the royal administration whom he had nominated as his executors, the councilor Juan de Astorga, and the royal secretaries Francisco de Oviedo, himself the owner of an important picture collection (Doc. 73), and Don Bartolomé Moreno. In Pacheco's will, opened on the day he died, he bequeathed a small devotional painting of the Magdalene to Astorga, a precious Crucifix to Oviedo, and to Moreno a painting of the Virgin.<sup>1</sup> Other persons were also willed religious pictures from his collection. The paintings from his oratory, and also his library of books, were willed to the convent of San Francisco in the town of Montalbán. The library of the convent received a marble Christ and 12 framed paintings of hermit saints, all the same size, by Ribera.

Pacheco's paintings were inventoried on 28 July (ff. 555–558v), and their appraisal by the painter Luis Fernández took place on 7 August (ff. 569v–588v). The sale by public auction of Pacheco's goods opened in Madrid on 17 August; some paintings were sold to distinguished bidders, including the Conde de Montalbán, Marquesa de Almanacin, and Don Juan González, the latter buying 47 pictures, including El Greco's View of Toledo (no. 12) for a total of 5,710 reales.

The majority of artists listed in the valuation of Pacheco's collection were Spanish. It would appear then that this collector sought works by Spanish artists and court contemporaries rather than old master and foreign paintings, as a matter of choice, availability, or economic necessity. The oldest Spanish painting was a portrait of one of Pacheco's ancestors by Alonso Sánchez Coello (no. 48). Unfortunately, the identity of the sitter of a Velázquez portrait is not given (no. 19), nor are the identities of a series of six portraits of writers (no. 86). One remarkable aspect of this collection was the large number of landscape paintings it contained. Of the 207 pictures listed in Fernández's valuation, some 138 were landscapes, 98 of which made up sets of more than two works. These paintings included cityscapes, landscapes on canvas and metal supports, perspectives, battles, a seastorm (no. 15), landscapes with religious subjects, and a Burning of Troy. There were landscapes from Italy as well as the more common type of city views from Flanders (nos. 1) and nine landscapes by an artist entered as "Boy" in the valuation, which may represent a garbled form of the name Pedro de Vos (nos. 6, 7).

More interesting still were the landscape paintings in the valuation attributed to Spanish hands; the document lists works by "the Mallorcan" (no. 5), Francisco de Collantes (nos. 8, 9), Pedro Núñez del Valle (nos. 14, 28), Eugenio Caxés (no. 17), and Pedro de Orrente (no. 23). One painting appears to have been a version of El Greco's famous View of Toledo (Washington, National Gallery) (no. 12). Pacheco also owned a portrait (no. 55) and a St. Dominic (no. 75) by El Greco. In keeping perhaps with Pacheco's interest in the minor genres of painting, his collection also included small genre pictures, which may have been Flemish (nos. 38, 41), still lifes (nos. 31, 37, 42, 52–54, 64, 74, 78), personifications of the Seasons (no. 67), as well as one Vanitas painting (no. 32).

Don Antonio Carnero (d. 2 October 1661) began his secretarial career at the court of Brussels and entered the service of the Conde-Duque de Olivares in 1622 as one of his secretaries, also becoming secretary to the king. Carnero was the private secretary closest to Olivares, and showed his continued loyalty even after the latter's disgrace in 1643.<sup>1</sup> By the time of his death, he had risen to become a knight of the Order of Santiago and was Philip IV's last Secretario de Estado, appointed in October 1660. His postmortem inventory, begun on 5 October, was drawn up by his brother-in-law, Don Iñigo López de Zárate, a member of the Consejo de Estado and secretary of the Consejo Supremo de Italia. The appraisal of the estate was drawn up by Carnero's son, D. Alonso Carnero y Zárate, with his paintings collection valued on 17 September 1662 by Francisco de Burgos Mantilla, painter.

At the time of Carnero's marriage to Ana María López de Zárate in 1631, he drew up an inventory of his capital, which included a small number of pictures comprising three religious subjects, eight landscapes, and two portraits.<sup>2</sup> At the time of Carnero's death, the collection had grown to nearly 100 works. Carnero's collection of portraits included family members, royalty, full-lengths of Philip IV and Queen Isabella (no. 34), and two half-length images of his patron, the Conde-Duque de Olivares (no. 27).

Twenty-seven religious pictures were listed in Carnero's oratory chapel. Moreover, the religious subject matter of the paintings from the other rooms in Carnero's house suggests a considerable degree of piety in his taste, with only one mythological subject listed (no. 38). A number of large paintings may have been grouped together by subject matter to form a "series" of images of the Life of Christ (nos. 6–10), consisting of two pairs of pictures. A Crucifixion on a small panel "appeared to be by Titian" (no. 53), but was valued at 100 reales less than a large copy of Raphael's Madonna of the Fish (Madrid, Prado) (no. 2). Another copy of this famous painting, perhaps the same one, was in the collection of Diego de la Torre in 1674 (Doc. 91, no. 9 and Doc. 92, no. 3). A Christ Child with the Infant St. John the Baptist was qualified as a "well made" copy after a Rubens prototype, and Carnero also owned two pairs of copies of Titian's Ecce Homo and Mater Dolorosa, the better of which was hung in his chapel.

As has been suggested in the Introduction, the collection of Don Francisco de Oviedo (1663), in addition to being of interest in its own right, documents the much earlier collection of Don Bernardo de Sandoval y Rojas, Cardinal Archbishop of Toledo in the time of the Duque de Lerma. (Lerma was Cardinal Sandoval's nephew; the Cardinal was Archbishop from 1599 and died 7 December 1618.)

A provenance from the collection of Sandoval y Rojas is obvious from many of the entries. The presence of numerous still lifes accords with Philip's having bought this type of painting from the Archbishop's estate (see Introduction). Almost every artist mentioned in the documents was a member of the generation working under Philip III, and the exceptions are either older artists or, as in the case of Guido Reni and Ribera, artists whose careers were just beginning around 1610.

The collection presumably passed to the Oviedo family through the intervention of the Cardinal's contador mayor, Don Luis de Oviedo. The collection was subsequently owned by Don Luis's son, Don Luis González de Oviedo, and then by a second son, Don Francisco de Oviedo, in whose estate the pictures were inventoried and appraised. Both brothers had been in the Cardinal's service along with their parents. The Cardinal had also endowed their mother, the contador's widow, with an annuity for life. The presence of entailed items is curious – indeed, unprecedented – in a non-noble collection with a patronazgo (as opposed to a mayorazgo).

In addition to the works by Reni and Ribera, the tenebrist school is represented by a Madonna with Pilgrims attributed to Caravaggio (no. 1 in the valuation). This picture may be the canvas which now hangs in the Museo Lázaro Galdiano in Madrid – an excellent copy of the famous Madonna of Loreto that Caravaggio painted for the Church of San Agostino in Rome around 1604.<sup>1</sup>

There were also works attributed to Saraceni (“Carlos beneciano”; nos. 4, 8, 11, 14 (copy), 32, 39) and Guido Reni (no. 34, 37) in the Oviedo collection.<sup>2</sup> Saraceni is known to have sent three paintings to the Toledo Cathedral Chapter during the Archbishop's tenure.<sup>3</sup> The relatively large number of extant or documented copies, school pieces, and originals by Reni in Spanish collections today – not to mention the uncertainty with which the Oviedo documents attribute works to this artist – make identification difficult.<sup>4</sup>

The Oviedo collection was equally rich in works by Spanish painters active in the first wave of tenebrist naturalism. The largest group of these Spanish works consists of approximately nine paintings by the Toledan artist Luis Tristán, a pupil of El Greco who quickly adopted the new chiaroscuro manner (nos. 9, 16, 17, 35, 36, 44).<sup>5</sup> Tristán is known to have painted the posthumous likeness of Cardinal Sandoval y Rojas (documented to 1619) that still hangs in the gallery of archepiscopal portraits in the Sala Capitular of the Toledo Cathedral.<sup>6</sup>

A second contemporary Spanish tenebrist, Juan Sánchez Cotán, was represented in the collection by four still lifes – all copies (nos. 31, 51). The fact that these works are copies is not without significance, because it gives an idea of the popularity that Cotán's secular works had attained after his entrance into the Carthusian order in 1604.<sup>7</sup> Two of the paintings attributed to Cotán are described as “landscapes.” Although no such works by Cotán are known to be extant, a paisillo pequeño was recorded in his inventory of 1603.<sup>8</sup> “Pais” might also refer to a landscape format (horizontal). Cotán's teacher, Blas del Prado, was also included in the Oviedo collection (no. 23), as was the earlier master, Morales (nos. 107). The court circles were represented, as already noted, by the gentleman-painter and collector, Don Juan de Jaureguí, as well as Vicencio Carducho and Eugenio Caxés, who were active as a team at the Toledo Cathedral in 1614.

Works by northern artists are also found in the collection. In addition to a work by Frans Floris

(no. 63) and a copy after Dürer (no. 38), there were Flemish landscapes, flower pieces, and still lifes. One miscellaneous item, a monumental View of Venice, is of interest as the most highly valued painting in the collection. It could have been Italian, although it might possibly have been done by a Fleming or even a Spaniard working after prints, such as Jacopo de' Barbari's famous woodcut map of 1497–1500. Since El Greco was also painting cityscapes and topographical views at about the time the Archbishop was assembling his collection, there may have been a local interest in this genre.<sup>9</sup>

The inventory, valuation, and partition of the estate of Don Francisco “legitimate son of the Señores Luis de Oviedo, Contador mayor to His Eminence, and of his wife, Doña Beatriz de Espinoza” (f. 178), were made following his death 21 February 1663.<sup>10</sup>

Tapestries were inventoried on f. 5, with five panels “de la Gentilidad” and a six-panelled History of Scipio. The paintings were inventoried 26 February 1663 (ff. 10–13, 150–53) with 69 lots numbered 55–123, and were appraised 26 September 1663 by Luis Fernández, who is styled maestro pintor and a “vecino de Madrid” (ff. 24–31). Certain of the pictures were entailed for inheritance by the eldest son. The entailed pictures are specified on ff. 427v–430v, in the hijuela (inheritance portion) of Don Luis, the eldest son. Published here is the cuerpo de hacienda (ff. 208v–219v).

1. Pérez Sánchez, in Seville 1973, p. 4-5, no. 5. The years 1613-14 seem particularly important for the arrival of Caravaggesque works in Spain. The 1647 inventory of the collection of the Almirante de Castilla also includes a similarly described work. It is impossible to say with certainty whether the two pictures were identical or whether they were independent copies of Caravaggio's original. The most likely (but by no means certain) conclusion is that there were in fact two copies and that the Oviedo picture had originally been a part of the collection of the Cardinal Sandoval y Rojas. If so, then there is circumstantial evidence of yet another close copy of Caravaggio in Spain within a decade of the artist's death.
2. Of the paintings attributed to Reni in the 1663 inventory, only the first three attributions were accepted at the subsequent valuation. See the Oviedo documents, lot numbers as noted above in the text.
3. Pérez Sánchez, "Carlo Saraceni à la Cathedrale de Toledé," in Actes du XXIIeme Congrès International d'Histoire de l'Art, vol. 2, Budapest 1970, pp. 25–28; documents published by the Marques de Saltillo, "Efemerides artisticas madrilenas," in Boletín de la Real Academia de la Historia, vol. 120, 1947, p. 610. Cf. Seville 1973, nos. 31–33. The Judith in the Oviedo lists may be the "good copy" that Pérez Sánchez recorded on the Madrid art market in 1963 – see his Pintura italiana del siglo XVII en España, Madrid 1965, p. 567.
4. The Immaculate Conception, now in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York (no. 59.32), is perhaps the most famous of Reni's commissions for Spanish patrons. Friedlaender 1965, p. 57 and note 6, speculates that it was influential in developing the seventeenth-century Spanish formula for this subject in Spain. H. Hibbard, on the other hand, finds that Reni's Inmaculata was "sent to Spain, where it seems to have aroused little comment." See Hibbard's article in the Metropolitan Museum of Art Bulletin, vol. 28, 1969, pp. 21–22. Pérez Sánchez 1965, pp. 168ff., lists 32 extant or documented works by Reni in Spain, as well as a large number of school pieces, copies, lost works, and other works described as "badly attributed" to Reni. I have not been able to identify any of these with the Oviedo/Sandoval y Rojas pieces.
5. Angulo and Pérez Sánchez, Historia de la pintura española, vol. 2, Escuela toledana ..., Madrid 1972, pp. 113ff. It is difficult to identify extant works by Tristán with any of the paintings mentioned in the Oviedo lists. The catalogue of Tristán's works in Angulo/Pérez Sánchez, vol. 2, 1972, offers no parallels for the secular works in the inventories. The St. Sebastian, no. 21 in the valuation, might refer to the canvas of the same subject in the Toledo Cathedral (Angulo/Pérez Sánchez, vol. 2, 1972, p. 188, no. 220, pl. 188; the work is signed), but the Toledo work has only four arrows, while the valuation specifies five. Perhaps one was lost when the painting was cut down – if it was cut down – to the present three-quarter-length format. The entry most likely to find identification is no. 54, a Self-portrait. The so-called Self-portrait of Borgianni in the Prado (no. 877), which has been variously given to Mazo and to March, has also been attributed to Tristán as well. The authorship of this work is at best disputed; it is still the subject of much scholarly discussion. See Angulo/Pérez Sánchez, vol. 2, 1972, p. 191, and especially, R.E. Spear, Caravaggio and his Followers, rev. ed., New York 1975, no. 8, pp. 56–57, and Appendix (Spear's), p. 227. A proposed Self-portrait of Tristán was on the Paris art market in 1928; its attribution was tentatively accepted by Angulo and Pérez Sánchez (vol. 2, 1972, p. 191, no. 231, pl. 156).
6. Ibid., pp. 194–95, pl. 95. See J. Brown and D. A. Carr, in Studies in the History of Art, vol. 2, Washington 1982, pp. 32–42, for an extended discussion of portraits and possible portraits of Cardinal Sandoval y Rojas.
7. J. Cavestany, Floreros y bodegones en la pintura española (exhibition catalogue), Madrid 1936–40, p. 137, publishes Cotán's 1603 inventory, taken before he entered into the order in 1604. This includes mentions of replicas and, in one case, of a Cotán canvas that served as the model for copies. See also Angulo/Pérez Sánchez II, 1972, p. 62.
8. Cavestany, p. 138; Angulo/Pérez Sánchez II, 1972, p. 95, no. 194.
9. See, for example, the View and Plan of Toledo in the Museo del Greco, Toledo.
10. This document has been published previously by Barrio Moya (1979, pp. 163–71), who gives a useful summary of the biography of Don Francisco de Oviedo (most of it from the document) but does not suggest a provenance to the collection of Cardinal Sandoval y Rojas.

Luisa de Sandoval,
Duquesa de Medina de Ríoseco wife of the 9th Almirante de Castilla

1664

Inventory and valuation of the estate of Doña Luisa de Sandoval, widow of Don Juan Alfonso Enríquez de Cabrera, 9th Almirante de Castilla. The paintings were appraised 24 May 1664 by Don Francisco Garrafa, ff. 26–38; there were 132 entries with nearly 200 pictures.

There are numerous pictures in the inventory with frames described as “marcos dorados de Napoles,” as well as a group of láminas, which might be prints or paintings on copper. The following transcription uses the 1684 copy, which compares accurately to the original and is more legible.

For the inventory of her husband, see Document 43.

Arce's collection grew steadily from 1643 to 1666. At the time of the inventory of 1643 (see Doc. 38), the collection was a modest but fairly select group of 26 paintings. There were seven works attributed to Orrente; two each given to Juan de la Corte, Collantes, Ribalta, and Ribera; a still life ascribed to Van der Hamen; and a much-valued Crucifix, said to have been painted by Navarrete. There were also several dubiously attributed pieces, such as a "Titian" – Christ at the Column, valued at only 440 reales – and a pair of classical subjects – Leda and Psyche – that would later be ascribed to Tintoretto. But even at this relatively early stage of his career, Arce was showing the taste for secular subjects and Italian artists that would characterize his acquisitions.

Arce's tasador in 1643 was Angelo Nardi, who apparently became an important link between Arce and the Madrid art community, not to mention one of Arce's favorite artists. By 1657 (Doc. 66), Arce had acquired at least five and probably eight of Nardi's works (nos. 1, 2, 13, 14). Arce had also augmented his holdings of canvases attributed to Orrente and increased the percentage of secular subjects. Five new pictures attributed to Ribera had been acquired, along with one by Bartolomé Carducho. In both the 1643 and 1657 inventories, a number of works were left unassigned, but Arce was already displaying a concern with attribution and connoisseurship that characterized such devoted collectors as Don Gaspar de Haro. By 1664, several of the unattributed paintings from the earlier inventories were attributed, suggesting that Arce and his artistic advisors were constantly refining their appreciation of his pictures (eg. nos. 30, 31).

The most extensive inventory of Arce's collection yet discovered was taken upon the occasion of his second marriage, in 1664. By this time, Arce had amassed 20 paintings attributed to Orrente and had complemented these with a Mary Magdalene given to Bassano (no. 4), which apparently hung next to them. An important Ribera, The Trinity (possibly the painting now in the Prado, no. 1069), two Heads by Massimo Stanzione, a Mark Anthony and Cleopatra by Borgianni, and a city view by Codazzi had expanded the Italian Seicento holdings, with particular emphasis on tenebrist painters. Central Italy of the previous century was represented by works attributed to Giulio Romano, Sebastiano del Piombo, and Tibaldi, along with the Netherlandish masters, Bosch and Bril. The contemporary painters of the Spanish court were also represented, including Velázquez (no. 22), Nardi (who may have been dead by this time, nos. 41-45),<sup>1</sup> Caxés (nos. 25, 56, 116), and Vicencio Carducho (no. 33, but the entry may be an error recording the sketch by Bartolomé Carducho mentioned above). Caxés is known to have copied Correggio early in his career (Leda and the Swan, Prado no. 120 – on loan to the Provincial Museum, Seville), so the presence of a copy after Correggio's Ecce Homo is doubly interesting.

Arce's inventories are also of interest in that the valuations do not remain steady but rather fluctuate from year to year along a generally, and often steeply, inflating course. For example, Orrente's Descent from the Cross, appraised at 1,100 reales in 1643 (Doc. 38, no. 1), was appraised at 4,400 in 1664 (Doc. 75, no. 2). Indeed, over half of the readily identified works coming to the 1664 inventory from the earlier descriptions of Arce's collections show increases to at least twice – and more often, three or four times – the original valuations. This is in distinct contrast to the more common practice of repeating earlier appraisals at face value, as for example in the Carpio inventory of 1689.

A number of non-aesthetic factors might have influenced these changes. There was both inflation of prices and devaluation of vellón currency in terms of silver during the period 1643–1664, although the 1664 inventory may have been taken after an anti-inflationary decree brought the vellón and silver currencies into parity.<sup>2</sup> There is also circumstantial evidence to suggest that Arce manipulated the valuation process in order to obtain a more favorable financial position in the partitions, settlements, and other negotiations surrounding the death of his first wife and his subsequent remarriage.<sup>3</sup> For example, it would have been to Arce's advantage, at the time of his first wife's death, to obtain a low valuation for those objects in the common household (especially in her dowry or her inheritance from her first marriage) which Arce wanted to keep for himself. If the paintings were given relatively low values, then it would cost Arce much less to keep his collection together during the liquidation of the estate. At the time of Arce's second marriage, the opposite would have been true: if Arce inflated the value of the goods he was bringing to the marriage, then his (or his heirs') relative position in a future settlement would be improved. Similarly, Arce could expect to benefit from deflating the value of goods in his second wife's dowry, since the dowry and other property that a wife brought to a marriage affected the claim that she (or her heirs from a previous marriage) could make before any partition of the new common household. In fact, Arce, in 1666, accepted the paintings in his second wife's dowry only after deflating – by 33 percent across the board – their appraised values as given in the settlement of her first husband's estate, just a few months earlier. Arce and his appraisers may have been reacting to deflationary decrees or the real market situation, and it is always possible that the more casual attitude toward prices in royal or noble liquidations reflected uncontested settlements and a need to liquidate estates quickly. (If the Carpio almoneda of 1689 may be taken as evidence, some variation between the appraised and actual sale prices was possible.) But Arce's good financial position made an estate auction highly unlikely; whether intentional or not, the changes in the appraised prices of works in his collection were all to Arce's benefit.

Fluctuations may also have implications about the relative aesthetic value of each piece or the reliability of a given attribution. For example, an anonymous Leda, paired with a Psyche at 200 and 150 reales, respectively, in 1643 (Doc. 38, nos. 18 and 19), was raised to 600 reales, versus 330 for its pendant, once it has been attributed to Tintoretto in 1664. At the same time, the modest nature of the price – 600 reales – stands in some contrast to the valuations placed on the works of Ribera and Orrente, and suggests that Arce's (or his appraiser's) faith in the attribution to Tintoretto was not great. A more spectacular jump – from 176 to 700 reales – accompanied the attribution of two pictures of Sleeping Cupids (Doc. 66, no. 15) to Luca Cambiaso in 1664 (Doc. 75, nos. 30, 31). Other paintings decline in price or merely hold their own: a Van der Hamen Still Life declines from 250 to 200 (1643, Doc. 38, no. 13; 1664, Doc. 75, no. 100) and is not even attributed in the later inventory. Van der Hamen must have seemed old-fashioned at mid-century, with Arellano and other “modern” still-life painters active, so the decline in price may not be remarkable; the loss of an attribution is, on the other hand, unusual in such a carefully conserved collection as Arce's. It would seem that the work had been de-attributed and simultaneously devalued. The fate of a Christ at the Column, unframed but attributed to Titian in 1643 (Doc. 38, no. 6), is more understandable. By 1664, what was presumably the same painting (Doc. 75, no. 39) had gained a frame but lost its attribution; it was valued at 500 reales – a slight increase – but not nearly as high as the already mentioned works by Ribera and Orrente.

Finally, it should be noted that the Italian bias of Arce's collection is overwhelming. Of 76 attributed works, 13 were painted by sixteenth-century Italian artists (including El Greco). Ten or more were painted by contemporary Italians active in Italy, and another 18 were painted by contemporary Italians or painters of Italian descent working in Spain. There was one work by Ribera, and 24 more by other Italianate Spaniards: that is, nearly nine out of ten attributed canvases were Italianate in style. This may have been due to the influence of the Italian-born Nardi – and of Velázquez – but it was an important aspect of Arce's collection from the very beginning.

In the valuation of the estate of Tomás Sánchez, whose profession was unspecified in the documents, and Ana María de Peñaranda (d. 13 July 1665) on the occasion of her death, their collection of paintings was valued by the painter Francisco Gutiérrez Cavello on 12 August 1665. The most remarkable feature of this appraisal is the large number of paintings attributed to Juan Bautista de la Cotera and Manuel de Molina, who were both prominent artists in their own time, but whose works remain unknown today. Díaz del Valle cited Molina in his notes on painting in 1658, when he was seventy years old, and commented that he was a prolific painter who was represented in many private collections at court.<sup>1</sup> Indeed, there were 18 religious subjects by Molina in the collection of Sánchez and Peñaranda. Thirteen paintings by De la Cotera in the collection reflected this artist's greater versatility and included religious subjects, perspective paintings and battles, and a painting of The Fall of Troy. This artist is documented working in Madrid between 1604 and 1648; in the documents he styled himself pintor de Su Majestad.<sup>2</sup>

Judging from the number and value of the paintings in the collection by Juan Antonio de Frías y Escalante (ca. 1633–ca. 1670), Tomás Sánchez and his wife may have acted as important private patrons of this young artist. No foreign artists were identified in the document, and the only imported paintings listed were Flemish paintings on copper of floral festoons (no. 25) and unspecified subjects (no. 20). Two religious pictures were said to be copies (nos. 17, 23), but the source of their compositions is not given.

The painter-appraiser of this collection, Francisco Gutiérrez, specialized in subject paintings in perspective settings, and the collection included two of his own pictures of the Marriage of the Virgin and the Visit of the Queen of Sheba to Solomon (no. 30). These were probably multi-figured compositions similar to works of the same subjects by the artist now at Villagarcía de Campos.<sup>3</sup> In a blatant act of self-admiration, Gutiérrez made them the most highly valued pictures in the whole collection, worth far more than other perspectival paintings in the appraisal.

The inventory of Diego de Cortavila y Sanabria (d. 20 November 1665), who was entitled Boticario Mayor Jubilado of the king, was drawn up by his widow, Juana Calderón, in Madrid from 1 December 1665. Paintings inventoried in the house (ff. 407v–411) and in the oratory (ff. 423–423v) were appraised by Don Simon Leal, a painter who used his more prestigious royal title of “Ujier de saleta de la Reyna” (ff. 433–439).

The section of the appraisal which listed “láminas” (nos. 57 ff) included paintings on metal, stone, and wooden panels, all of which were of religious subject matter. While the most valuable works in Cortavila y Sanabria’s collection were generally religious paintings, there were also a number of paintings of much more modest value which had a devotional, rather than aesthetic, relevance for this collector. In this regard, the collection is entirely typical of its time. A popular format was the religious subject set in landscape, of which he owned a number of examples (nos. 29, 30, 31, 33), and in perspectival settings, of which he owned two examples (no. 26), along with six others of unspecified subjects (nos. 2, 54). The only attributed painting in the collection was a Martyrdom of St. Catherine by Juan de la Corte (no. 9); Cortavila y Sanabria appears to have been particularly devoted to this saint, since he owned four other representations of her (nos. 15, 23, 28, 65). The gods Venus (no. 24), Cupid (no. 6), and Flora (no. 27) appeared on this collector’s walls, but the values attributed to these paintings in comparison to those of other works suggests that they were not the most outstanding works of the collection.

Fernando de Borja y de Aragón
Conde de Mayalde, Conde de Simari and Príncipe de Esquilache

Don Fernando de Borja y de Aragón was the youngest brother of Juan de Borja, 1st Conde de Mayalde, who was made Conde de Ficalho by Philip III and who owned a large picture collection of 215 works inventoried in 1600.<sup>1</sup> Among Fernando de Borja's inherited titles was that of 3rd Conde de Mayalde and Príncipe de Esquilache.<sup>2</sup> He was comendador mayor of the military Order of Montesa and was Viceroy of Aragón and at the time of his death at the beginning of 1666 he also occupied the high palace offices of cavallerizo mayor of the king and his Gentilhombre de Cámara, as well as being a member of the Council of State and Council of War.

His collection of paintings was valued between 10 and 15 March 1666, by the painter Juan Antonio de Escalante, who followed the attributions given to paintings in the inventory without adding any of his own. Escalante's further connection with the family is shown by his appraisal on 6 November 1658, of the collection of paintings left on the death of Francisco de Borja (1577–1658), 2nd Conde de Mayalde, 5th Príncipe de Esquilache, who was the nephew of Don Fernando de Borja and whom Vicencio Carducho mentioned among the most significant collectors at court in 1633.<sup>3</sup>

A prized work of Fernando de Borja's collection was a figure of Christ housed in a tabernacle that miraculously spoke to San Francisco de Borja and which was admired also by Cassiano dal Pozzo in 1626. In 1633 Vicencio Carducho singled out this sculpture as one of the most significant works in the collection of Francisco de Borja.<sup>4</sup> The collection was especially distinguished by its eleven Venetian old master paintings; three religious subjects attributed to Titian (nos. 45, 50, 64), which included a version of the Tribute Money; two by Tintoretto (nos. 14, 17); and six originals by the Bassani (no. 70). A Christ at the Column by Luca Cambiaso appears to have been a particularly highly esteemed painting, judging by its high value (no. 15). The only Spanish picture attributed in the appraisal was a Virgin and Child by the Valencian artist Francisco de Ribalta (1564–1628), who worked in Madrid between 1582–1598 (no. 53). It is difficult to believe that two small religious subjects attributed to Rubens were originals, given their low appraised value of 50 reales each (nos. 104, 105). A print of Raphael's Transfiguration appears to have been a particularly revered image, judging from the fact that this had been laid onto a panel and was framed and covered with a crimson curtain. There were also prints by Albrecht Dürer (nos. 10, 11), including 57 small copper plates for printing images, some of which were also by Dürer, a painting of St. Jerome (no. 62), and what appear to have been 20 framed carved panels after the Apocalypse series by the same artist (nos. 7–9).

This subjects of the pictures in this collection were overwhelmingly religious, with only one mythological painting listed, which appears to have represented the Forge of Vulcan (no. 121). Not surprisingly, there were also landscapes, a bodegón (no. 125), flower paintings, and still lifes, and a painting of the famous classical bronze of the Spinario or Boy Removing a Thorn from his Foot (no. 138), also found in other collections of the time. The sets of 54 paintings of famous men (no. 13) and 12 women (no. 115) were probably older works that had been inherited with the family collections. More unusual, however, were the pair of humorous pictures representing a male and a female clown (no. 73).

Jerónima de Villarreal (d. 28 February 1666), first married to Don Carlos Pelegrin, was on her death in 1666 the second wife of Don Joseph Mensa, royal secretary, notary in the Consejo Supremo de Aragón, and Oficial mayor in the secretariat of Sardinia. Mensa began an inventory of their estate on 3 March 1666, and had the paintings collection valued by the painter Julián González on 14 March.

Given the large number of religious subjects in the collection, it is surprising that only one of them was attributed in the appraisal, a St. Luke and the Virgin by Antiveduto Gramatica (no. 23), an artist who, according to Mancini, exported paintings to Spain from Rome. The only paintings attributed to Spanish hands were examples of the “minor” genres: battle paintings by Juan de la Corte (no. 46), landscapes by the contemporary artist at court Juan de Solís (d.1654) (no. 37), and older fruit still lifes by Juan van der Hamen (no. 66). Other attributed pictures included the ever-popular themes of Noah’s Ark (no. 6) from Bassano and the Seasons (no. 63) from the Bassano studio. A mythological painting of Mars and Venus (no. 64) was said to be copied after Titian, although this may have been mistaken for another Venetian prototype, as no such subject by Titian was recorded in Spain. However, the collection reflected an evident taste for mythological subjects, and the appraisal listed paintings of Parnassus (no. 11), Bacchus (no. 13), Diana and Mercury (no. 51), and two “ordinary” landscape overwindows with the Labours of Hercules (no. 65). Although Flemish paintings were extremely popular in court collections of the time, only one Flemish tavern scene was listed here (no. 62). A more unusual subject was a picture of the Three Fates (no. 24).

The inventory of Don Antonio de Mardones (d. 8 March 1665) was drawn up by his brother Don Pedro de Salazar Isla de la Peña from 13 March 1665, and his paintings collection valued by the royal painter Juan Carreño de Miranda on 2 August 1666. Mardones showed pride in his family in a series of ancestral portraits (no. 4) and a picture of his coat of arms (no. 38). Although Mardones' profession or title is not indicated in the document, a number of portraits of the Spanish royal family (nos. 5, 19, 33) suggest that he may have been employed in some royal office.

Mardones owned two copies after religious paintings by Titian, an Ecce Homo (no. 21) and a St. Sebastian (no. 32). While the ownership of copies of Venetian old master paintings was not unusual, it is perhaps more surprising that the attributed Spanish paintings in the collection were also copies. There were three copies after saints by Antonio de Pereda (no. 1), and in the oratory there was an Ecce Homo copied after Vicencio Carducho (no. 50), and an Entombment after Eugenio Caxés (no. 66). The only other author noted by Carreño was Annibale Carracci, from whom Mardones' copy of a Descent from the Cross derived (no. 51). This painting hung in Mardones' chapel, as did, it appears, a small Vanitas painting of a skull (no. 69). While a head of a poor man was said to be an original painting (no. 39), Carreño did not specify a reason for this observation. One of Mardones' mythological paintings was an Abduction of Europa (no. 18), which, by this date, was described as old and in poor condition. The other of the Charms of [the Sorceress] Medea (no. 31) was a very unusual subject in collections of the period. Unfortunately, a relatively valuable painting of the Rape of the Sabine Women (no. 23) was listed anonymously in Carreño's evaluation.

The widow of Cristóbal González Cossío, Catalina Velasco de Villarín, died thirty years after her husband, and her postmortem inventory was drawn up in Madrid from 23 August 1666. The paintings collection was inventoried on 28 August and appraised on 7 September 1666 by the royal painter Juan Carreño de Miranda.

After the public sale of some pictures in 1636, and the partition of her husband's estate, Velasco de Villarín was left with a small collection of some 40 paintings, most of which were listed in the inventory of 1636 (see Doc. 22). Thus, paintings by Eugenio Caxés – including a copy of a St. Francis by the artist (Doc. 81, no. 6) which was anonymous in 1636 (Doc. 22, no. 7) – Pedro de Orrente, Antiveduto Grammatica, and the copy after Raphael appear in the valuation of 1666. However, Carreño has added a number of new attributions to these works. A small painting of Velasco de Villarín's name saint, St. Catherine (no. 20), is here given to one "Martínez the Elder". A retablo with Christ, the Virgin, St. John the Evangelist, and Mary Magdalene, which was anonymous in 1636 (Doc. 22, no. 55) was attributed to Luis de Morales (El Divino) by Carreño (Doc. 81, no. 18), and its value had risen from 80 reales to 500 reales. More interesting still, a Last Supper that was anonymous in 1636 (Doc. 22, no. 72) was said to be a copy of Leonardo da Vinci's famous fresco in Milan by the Valencian artist Francisco Ribalta (Doc. 81, no. 19). An Immaculate Conception by Jusepe Leonardo (Doc. 81, no. 23), which is listed only in the document of 1666, appears to be one of the few paintings Catalina Velasco de Villarín acquired after her husband's death.

While the value of the paintings seem to have increased in Carreño's appraisal, any such comparison would have to take into account inflation between 1636 and 1666. In the case of a painting by Pedro de Orrente, Carreño corrected a subject listed as Jacob's Slave in 1636 (Doc. 22, no. 70) to Abraham's Slave, meaning Hagar, and raised its value from 88 reales to 550 reales (Doc. 81, no. 12). The most remarkable change in value, however, concerns two paintings by Antiveduto Grammatica. While an Annunciation by this artist was valued at 300 reales in 1636 (Doc. 22, no. 51), Carreño believed it a school piece which he valued at 1500 reales (Doc. 81, no. 5). Another work by Grammatica listed with no subject description in 1636 at 300 reales (Doc. 22, no. 52) was an original Flight into Egypt and was worth 2200 reales in 1666 (Doc. 81, no. 4). Carreño, however, thought much less of the Raphael copy which was so highly esteemed (at 550 reales) in 1636 (Doc. 22, no. 1), possibly because of its condition rather than its quality; this declined in value in 1666 to 300 reales (Doc. 81, no. 28).

This is a receipt issued by Pedro de Arce for the dowry that Doña Luisa Ordoñez y Rueda (widow of Don Antonio de Oviedo y Herrera, Knight of Santiago, Furiel Mayor de la Real Caballeriza de la Reina) brought to her marriage with Arce. “Carta de Pago y Reciuo De Dote y Lo demas que en ella yzo Declarado como yo Don Pedro de arce ...” declares that he married Doña Luisa Ordoñez y Rueda, widow of Don Antonio de Oviedo y Herrera, on 10 October 1664. A copy of the marriage contract follows, ff. 756v–757.

In addition to 36 paintings, there were three sets of tapestries, including one on the Life of Marcus Pompeius. Approximately 50 other paintings from the Oviedo estate were partitioned among her sons from her first marriage (not transcribed here).

Ramiro Felípez de Núñez de Guzmán,
Duque de Sanlúcar la Mayor and Duque de Medina de las Torres

Ramiro de Guzmán, Duque de Medina de las Torres (c. 1600–1668), was an important statesman of the Spanish Golden Age.<sup>1</sup> He married Olivares' daughter in 1624, and although the marriage ended with her premature death in 1626, he retained his father-in-law's favor. Originally the Marqués de Toral, he was created Duque de Medina de las Torres at Olivares' request. Medina de las Torres had begun collecting pictures before leaving Spain for Naples in 1638, and he eventually was to give works by Raphael, Corregio, and the Bassani to King Philip IV. His ownership of a collection, including a group of works by Juan de Jauregui, was mentioned by Carducho in 1633.<sup>2</sup> As already mentioned in the text, it is commonly assumed that it was Medina de las Torres, as Viceroy of Naples (from 1638 to 1643) who commissioned Ribera's Martyrdom of St. Philip for Philip IV in 1639 (Prado 1101).

Although Medina de las Torres' death inventory is disappointing both in its small size – only 66 lots – and in the paucity of attributions suggested by the evaluators, it does document Medina de las Torres' ownership of two works by Ribera: a Dream of Jacob and a Liberation of St. Peter, here identified somewhat controversially as the works in the Prado, nos. 1117 and 1073. These pictures, both signed and dated 1639, are nearly identical in size: the Jacob measures 179 x 233 cm., the Liberation 177 x 232 cm. Their complementary compositions suggest they were conceived as a pair. Furthermore, they entered the Spanish royal collections together, via Isabel Farnese's gallery at La Granja (Prado 1985, pp. 548 and 557). In the inventory, they are listed as a “large St. Peter when the angel released him from prison,” and “another picture, of the same size, of Jacob,” both “originals by Jusephe [sic] de Rivera” appraised at 3,000 reales each (lots 236 and 237).

The identification of the Jacob with the work in the Prado rests on the identical sizes of the Prado's Dream of Jacob and Liberation of St. Peter. The brevity of the description and lack of dimensions for the image of Jacob in the inventory leaves open the possibility, recently raised by Alfonso E. Pérez-Sánchez,<sup>3</sup> that the two Medina de las Torres works were not the pictures in the Prado but rather two similarly-sized works at the Escorial: a Jacob with the Flocks of Laban (signed and dated 1632) and another Liberation of St. Peter. Although Pérez-Sánchez rightly notes that there is no reason why Medina might not have collected two earlier works rather than commissioned two new ones, this assumes that Ribera, who seems generally to have been working on commissions in the 1630s, had two pictures of roughly the same size on two unusual Biblical subjects “in stock” and ready to sell to Medina. It is not clear, moreover, that the two Escorial works were conceived as a pair: the Dream of Joseph and the Liberation of St. Peter at the Prado both show angelic intervention in human affairs, but how might one relate the story of Laban laying peeled rods to Peter's release? There is also the problem of fitting the two into the history of the decoration of the Escorial. Medina died in 1668, after the campaigns to decorate the chapter rooms were completed. It may be that the two Riberas were bought for the crown sometime thereafter and figured among the 20 works sent by Charles II in 1675. It seems more likely, however, that the Escorial works came to the monastery earlier, possibly separately, so that the pair dating to Medina's vicereignty would have been commissioned by him.

Also attributed to Ribera in the inventory are a large Nativity (no. 1; 6,600 reales) and a Venus (no. 2; 5,000 reales), neither of which may be identified with certainty among Ribera's extant paintings.<sup>4</sup> Other pictures of interest in the collection were a Prophet and a Sibyl (no. 7; 1,000 reales each), a “rounded” Holy Family (no. 9; 1,500 reales), a Madonna and Child with the Young St. John and St. Bernard (also said to be rounded – no. 10; 1,100 reales), a medium-sized Adoration of the Magi (no. 12; 1,100 reales), and a large Deposition (no. 58; 2,200 reales). None of these is attributed in the inventory, but several suggest known works by Ribera. For example, the composition with St. Bernard, except for its rounded shape (due to framing?), reminds one of Ribera's Madonna and Child with the Young St. John and St. Bruno now in Weimar (Kunstsammlungen; 205 x 153.5 cm., signed and dated 1634). To judge from published photographs, the Weimar canvas may be cut down at the top, and it would have been easy to confuse the two Carthusian saints.

Also of interest is the group of secular pieces, some with unusual descriptions. No. 3, for example, lists a medium-sized "fable of a naked woman and a man who comes talking to her on horseback." There was also a pair of pictures of "fables, the one of a naked woman with some children and the other of another [woman] riding a male goat" (no. 8; 600 reales). A large composition of a "naked woman with her ladies, looking at herself in a mirror" (no. 4; 3,000 reales) recalls compositions of Venus and the Graces or Venus at her Toilette by Liss, Reni, Albani, and other Seicento painters. These secular and, in fact, pagan and erotic subjects point once again to the common phenomenon of sensual aspects or erotic subjects in noble collections. As in the case of many other collectors, it is likely that most of the secular works were acquired during Medina de las Torres' tenure in Naples.

Finally, two northern European works should be noted: a version of Bosch's Triumph of Death (no. 11; 1,650 reales) and a very large panel of Venus and Mars by Maarten de Vos (no. 46; approximately 6 by 12 feet, 4,000 reales).<sup>5</sup> Other northern works may also have been included; for example, given the prevalence of Flemish landscapes in Madrid collections, it is highly likely that some of the many landscapes in Medina de la Torres' gallery came to Madrid from the north.

For the most part, the values given to the pictures conform to those encountered in other Madrid inventories of the second half of the seventeenth century. Two interesting items should, however, be noted. First, the highest-priced picture in the collection was not an original composition but a copy after Raphael's Transfiguration (no. 50 – called "Mount Tabor"; appraised at 11,000 reales), a huge piece constructed out of two panels, each nine feet high. This picture may almost certainly be identified with the fine copy now in the Prado (no. 315). Second, there was a Flower Piece, one of the few still lifes in the collection (no. 13), appraised at 1,100 reales, or 100 ducats. This relatively high price underscores once again the continuous upward valuation of the genres during the seventeenth century.

Like many of the noble collectors, Medina de las Torres appears not to have been very interested in the local Spanish school – except for Ribera and the appraisers themselves, no Spanish artists are mentioned in the document. Since we know that he owned works by the gentleman-painter Juan de Jaureguí, cited by Carducho in 1633, it may be that the portraits of Philip IV, Olivares, and other notables of the previous régime (nos. 59-63), as well as other unattributed works, were in fact Spanish.

The inventory was taken by his widow, Doña Catalina de Guevara, Condesa de Oñate y de Villamediana (i.e., in her own right). The duke's paintings were inventoried on 8 January 1669 (ff. 21–25) and appraised in 66 lots (numbered 232–297, ff. 39–44v) on 26–27 November 1669 by Juan Carreño de Miranda (1614–1685), "painter to His Majesty," and Carreño's younger colleague and former pupil, Juan Martín Cabezalero (1633–1673).

5. It has proved impossible to identify this panel. De Vos was principally a religious painter, but there are several extant mythological pictures by his hand which suggest what the Medina de las Torres Venus and Mars might have looked like. See, for example, the Venus Mourning Adonis that he painted ca. 1575 – illustrated in A. Zweite, Marten de Vos als Maler, Berlin 1980, cat. 44, pp. 281–82 and 341, fig. 54. For a general discussion of the role of secular myth in De Vos' oeuvre, see Zweite, pp. 166–73 and 220–23. For information on De Vos' influence in Spain and Mexico, see F. de la Maza, El pintor Martín de Vos en México (Mexico City 1971), passim.

The postmortem inventory of Catalina de Alvarado was drawn up in 1669 by her husband Don Juan de Torres y Barrantes, a familiar of the Inquisition, on behalf of their daughters D<sup>a</sup> Bernauela and D<sup>a</sup> Catalina de Torres y Alvarado.

This collection contained paintings by contemporary Spanish artists, as well as some older painters such as El Greco, and a number of “old master” pictures. The attributions to Parmigianino (no. 45), Titian (no. 50), and Tintoretto (no. 52) may have been optimistic. There was a small collection of portraits, some apparently by famous artists (nos. 49–56). Among the religious paintings in the collection was a painting of the young Virgin by Francisco de Zurbarán (no. 17), which was probably painted during the artist’s final years at court, 1658–64.

Two landscapes with religious subjects were identified as by Eugenio Caxés. Alvarado also owned a religious painting on copper (no. 25) and small landscapes (no. 77) by licenciado Pedro García Ferrer, who was also a priest and whom Lázaro Díaz del Valle considered an outstanding artist (“pintor de los lucidos desta [corte]”).<sup>1</sup> Seascapes and fruit still lifes painted by “Morán,” an artist who is most probably to be identified with Santiago Morán (nos. 64, 73), also illustrate the fact that Spanish artists at court diversified their production and worked in various genres for the private market. One of the more remarkable works in the collection, however, was a collaborative painting (no. 35), a depiction of the sleeping Christ Child by the short-lived figure painter Mateo Cerezo, with the surrounding garland by the flower painter Juan de Arellano. This painting had a northern counterpart in the collection, a painting with figures by David Teniers and flowers by the specialist Frans Ijckens (no. 65). There were four more flower paintings said to be signed by Arellano (no. 96); another flower painting was from the school of Mario Nuzzi (no. 57), the Italian master from whom Arellano was reputed to have derived his own style. Indeed, this collection displayed a particular taste for flower paintings and still lifes; there were 13 flowerpieces listed and 18 still-life paintings by Spanish and foreign artists, Four Seasons in flowers and fruit (no. 58), and a painting of a hare attributed to Albrecht Dürer (no. 69).

Despite De Torres’ being a familiar of the Inquisition, his and his wife’s collection included at least one Venetian erotic mythological subject, Venus with Cupid (no. 62) listed as “school of Titian”. There were also paintings of the stories of Perseus and Andromeda attributed to Parmigianino (no. 45), Dido and Aeneas (no. 68), Jason and Medea (no. 70), and Narcissus (no. 70), which suggest the educated taste of their owners. Two Flemish landscapes with the stories of Icarus and Ganymede (no. 95) may have been considered suitable pendants because of their depiction of airborne figures.

The postmortem inventory of Don Blasco de Loyola, a Basque knight of the Order of Santiago and comendador of Villarubia de Ocaña, was drawn up by his widow Ursola Venó del Rey and brother-in-law, Doctor Don Joseph Venó del Rey, and was opened in Madrid on 21 October 1669.<sup>1</sup> He was protected by the Jesuit Father Nithard, confessor of Queen Mariana of Austria, and was an excellent bureaucrat, whose loyalty and efficiency allowed him to rise in the administrative hierarchy to achieve great social distinction. Loyola was Secretario del Despacho from 1655, in direct contact with the king and his prime minister (as Jerónimo de Villanueva had been before him). He became secretary of the Despacho Universal during the regency of Queen Mariana (from 1665) and was consequently also secretary of the Junta de Gobierno, which met daily during the minority of Charles II. At his death, Loyola was also a member of the Consejo de Guerra and the Cámara de Indias. However, his main governmental office was Secretario de Estado, an office he had occupied since April 1662, with particular responsibility for Italy (in 1662, and between October 1665 and October 1669) and for the North (August 1662–October 1665).

Loyola's collection of paintings was appraised by the painter Don Sebastian de Herrera on 22 January 1670. Although the collection was not as large as those of two other Secretaries of State, Diego de la Torre (Docs. 91 and 92) and Bartolomé de Legasa (Doc. 100), it was wide ranging in subject matter. Although most of the paintings were of religious subjects, there was also a painting of the Abduction of Europa (no. 19) and landscapes with nymphs (no. 2), a Flemish tavern scene (no. 30), and the Senses of Sight and Hearing (no. 36). It is surprising, however, that the document mentions no portraits. Heading the document was the only attributed work, the Judgement of Solomon by Rubens (no. 1), valued at 1,000 reales.<sup>2</sup> While Loyola probably admired this as a great work of art in its own right, its author and subject matter, concerning wisdom and the exercise of a difficult judgement, may have held a particular relevance for a minister who dealt with Flemish affairs. Moreover, a number of other paintings represented heroes of the Old Testament: there were two paintings of Judith and Holofernes (nos. 8, 13), two paintings of David with the head of Goliath (nos. 10, 27) a pair of pictures of David's triumph (no. 37), and a painting of Jael and Sisera (no. 11).

1. Loyola's valuation was previously published in J.L. Barrio Moya, "El hidalgo guipuzcoano Don Blasco de Loyola y el inventario de sus bienes," Cuadernos de Cultura, no. 10 (1987), pp. 83–90.

2. This was, perhaps, a version of the painting of this subject from Rubens' studio, which exists in the Prado, Madrid, and Statens Museum for Kunst, Copenhagen.

The combined inventory and valuation of the estate of Juana Alvarez de Pedrosa (d. 24 March 1671) and her husband, Francisco Ruíz de Miranda, silk merchant, were drawn up on her death, beginning in Madrid 28 March 1671. The paintings were valued by Joseph de Salazar, painter. The document is a representative example of the more modest collections of non-noble individuals at court, who, despite their small holdings of paintings, appear nevertheless to have invested in some high-quality paintings by contemporary masters. Heading the valuation was a Virgin and Child painted by Alonso Cano (no. 1). This was the most valuable of the pictures and was, most probably, far superior in quality to most of the other paintings in the collection, all of which were listed anonymously. It may have formed the centerpiece of Ruíz de Miranda's small gallery or have been a focus for private devotions. Four paintings of the Furies (no. 20) are likely to have been copies of Titian's famous paintings of the Four Condemned that hung in the Madrid Alcázar. These were not, however, particularly valuable works and declined considerably in value in successive appraisals of the collection in 1674 and 1678.

Don Jerónimo Valle de la Cerda (d. 14 July 1670) was a Knight of Calatrava and lord of the town of Casa Tejada, a member of the Consejo de Castilla and contador mayor of the Consejo de Cruzada, a body originally established to raise funds for wars against Moorish infidels. His postmortem inventory was begun by his widow Leonor María de Saavedra in Madrid on 18 July 1670. The inventoried paintings (ff. 604–608v) were valued by Pedro de Villafranca, entitled Pintor de Su Magestad, on 29 May 1671 (ff. 575v–582v).

Valle de la Cerda's collection numbered well over 100 pictures, and although Villafranca assigned many of these high values, he did not attribute any to specific artists. There were large numbers of landscape paintings, at least one of which was described as Flemish (no. 95), as was a battle painting (no. 30). Five of the landscape pictures depicted scenes of banditry (nos. 15, 40, 83, 100, 102), a subject that characterized the work of many northern painters, and especially Salvator Rosa, among Italian artists. Five large hunting scenes, subjects sought after by aristocratic collectors at court and most probably Flemish in origin, were appraised at high sums (nos. 1, 4, 16, 17). Valle de la Cerda appears to have had a taste for classical and mythological subjects: at least two of his paintings depicted the common theme of the Loves of the Gods (nos. 13, 82). One represented the story of Pyramus and Thisbe (no. 99), another of Helen of Troy (no. 37) and two more unusual paintings the Fable of Pegasus (no. 12) and the Fable of Icarus (no. 84). A more exotic note was struck by a pair of paintings representing Amazons (no. 35) and two paintings of Moors in a religious procession (no. 90) and at a Moorish banquet (no. 92).

Don Francisco González Cossío de la Hoz was a Spanish army captain (maestre de campo), and a knight of the Order of Santiago, who was also a comendador of the order and enjoyed income from the rents of one of its benefices (encomiendas). He was probably related to the royal secretary Cristóbal González Cossío whose picture collection was appraised in 1666 (Doc. 22). Don Francisco's postmortem inventory was begun on 5 November 1671, and his paintings collection appraised on 10 and 14 December by the painter Gil Fredrique, whose name suggests an artist of northern origin. As the document makes clear, many of the pictures remained entailed to the estate of the deceased and had "vinculado" painted onto them.

Fredrique's valuation was headed by six original Flemish paintings of towns in Flanders (no. 1), which González Cossío may well have visited in his military service and which were entailed to his estate. While the series of 12 Flemish paintings on copper of the Passion of Christ (no. 8) may have been a relatively common type of painting in contemporary collections, works by Flemish primitives were rarer, and González Cossío could boast a work by Rogier van der Weyden (no. 34). It is difficult to identify the prototype for González Cossío's copy after Titian, described as "a picture of a young man (majico) and some women" (no. 89). The probability that two mythological paintings representing the Abduction of Europa and the Judgement of Paris (no. 20) were original paintings by Veronese is reflected in their high valuation and the fact that they too were entailed to the estate. This collector was not shy about owning subjects from classical mythology, probably depicting female nudes. Apart from the two pictures by Veronese, seven mythologies were painted on metal supports (nos. 16, 32, 94), and a further six paintings were listed merely as "fables" (nos. 96, 106).

Among the more innocuous subjects, the collection contained 19 flower paintings, including Spanish, Italian, and Flemish examples. There were six flowerpieces signed by the court specialist Juan de Arellano (no. 9), nine Italian works (no. 12), and two Flemish paintings of baskets of flowers (no. 10), which were listed as originals in the inventory but which the discriminating eye of the Flemish painter-appraiser judged to be copies. There were some 34 still lifes in the collection, whose subject matter in many cases was specified in the document. González Cossío, for instance, owned two still-life paintings of vessels and sugar cane by the Madrid still-life painter Antonio Ponce (no. 28) and three fruit still lifes by Juan Fernández El Labrador (nos. 14, 71). Reflecting the esteem court collectors always felt for the best works of Labrador, his small picture of bunches of grapes and apricots (no. 71) was appraised at some four times the value of the pair by Ponce, and a curious set of eight Arcimboldesque Seasons represented as faces composed of fruit, flowers, and fish (no. 100).

González Cossío's collection included two sets of royal portraits (nos. 29, 64) and various other royal portraits listed separately. In one group of portraits of popes and other persons, a painting of the Conde-Duque de Olivares by Velázquez (no. 110) was singled out as a distinctive image. A curiosity in the collection was a long painting of hands in different positions (no. 38), which suggests an artist's study.

On the death of Antonia María de Arce Calderón (d. 22 February 1673), her husband, Don Juan Bexarano, drew up an inventory of their estate, beginning on 2 March 1673. The small collection of paintings was valued by Francisco Brisarte, painter, on 16 May 1673. None of the paintings was identified by author, and the values suggest that the collection was made up of some pictures of high aesthetic quality and others with a purely devotional function. The most highly valued painting, for instance, was a large Immaculate Conception (no. 17) worth 1,500 reales, while a Crucifixion was valued at only 55 reales (no. 12), and a small Ecce Homo on vellum 22 reales (no. 34). Two genre paintings (bodegones) (no. 3) and a painting of the goddess Diana (no. 5), the single mythological subject in the collection, were also comparatively highly valued pictures. Nine paintings with religious subjects painted within floral arrangements (nos. 15, 23, 28, 33) reflect a growth in popularity of this genre of painting at court during the second half of the century. While generalized imaginary landscapes (paises) were extremely popular throughout the period, topographical views like Arce Calderón's paintings of four royal palaces (sitios reales) were less common (no. 21). Another unusual subject from contemporary life in this collection was a painting of a bullfight (no. 6).

The collection and social history of Jerónimo de Cuéllar are analyzed in the Introduction. One may only repeat the observation that Cuéllar's career, especially when viewed in parallel with those of Velázquez and Pedro de Arce, describes the path taken by many upwardly mobile non-noble families in the seventeenth century. A bourgeois Spaniard could use a career at court (that is, membership in the so-called "courtier class") to certify his origins in the gentry and gain entry into the petty nobility, usually through knighthood in a military order, for himself or a son. One should also point out the strong role that art collecting played in the social mimicry attendant upon social ambitions. For example, the relatively small size of Cuéllar's estate indicates that he was devoting a large proportion of his assets to collecting pictures and tapestries. Although this may have been due in part to his personal interests, one may assume that it must have had some social function as well.

The inventory and valuation of the estate of Don Jerónimo de Cuéllar, member of the Consejo de Su Magestad y Su Secretario de la Cámara y Estado de Castilla were drawn up by his widow and heir, Doña Gerónima de Velasco y Angulo, in Madrid beginning 26 January 1674.

The paintings were inventoried beginning 19 April 1674 (ff. 110–115v), with the valuation of goods, by Matías de Torres, "painter," (ff. 119–126) dated from 31 May 1674. Tapestries and rugs are also listed (ff. 127–131v). Internal evidence suggests that the inventory and the valuation are both incomplete, although no folios are missing from the protocol.

The postmortem inventory of the goods of the secretary Don Diego de la Torre (d. 27 August 1674), knight of the Order of Santiago, was drawn up by his widow María de Saraoz, Marquesa de Casaliche, and executors Don Andrés de la Torre and Don Francisco Ignacio de Trasmiera, regent of the Consejo de Italia, beginning on 1 September 1674. Diego de la Torre took over the office of Secretario de Estado, pertaining to Italy, in October 1669 on the death of Blasco de Loyola (Doc. 85). In November 1669, he was made Secretary of State for the North and occupied the office until his death. A set of four paintings of the Sack of Antwerp in De la Torre's collection (no. 61) directly related to his responsibilities for northern affairs, as perhaps did a picture of a Flemish battle (no. 85) and a painting of a battle of the King of Spain (no. 84). A portrait of Philip IV (no. 107) in the inventory was a mark of loyalty to the sovereign, who was the ultimate source of advancement at court. Although he was ennobled by admission into the military Order of Santiago, Torre's social aspirations culminated in a spectacular marriage to a titled member of the aristocracy, the Marquesa de Casaliche.

The extensive collection of paintings was inventoried between 1 and 2 September and the appraisal of the collection was undertaken between 14 and 15 November 1674 by the painter Matías de Torres. On his marriage to María de Saraoz, Diego de la Torre's own collection was swelled by more than 80 paintings she inherited from her mother, Micaela de Trasmiera. (These correspond to nos. 100–150 of the inventory.)

Both the inventory and the appraisal of this impressive collection are transcribed because many pictures are given artist attributions in one document and not the other. Moreover, a number of important paintings were listed in the inventory as a part of Torres's mayorazgo and consequently inalienable property. These did not appear in the painter's appraisal of the collection, which assigned values only to those paintings that could be sold by public auction. Diego de la Torre owned a remarkable collection of ten paintings by Jusepe de Ribera (nos. 2–4, 7, 10–14, and 16), which comprised an Immaculate Conception (no. 4), a biblical narrative from the story of Jacob (no. 2), and eight pictures of saints. It is testimony to the esteem in which this artist was held, and, the great value of the paintings, that all were entailed to De la Torre's estate. The other attributed paintings in the inventory assigned to the mayorazgo were a Virgin by Raphael (no. 68), a rustic scene by Bassano (no. 1), and a Judith by Rubens (no. 5). A copy of the last painting in the inventory (no. 150) was listed in the valuation (Doc. 92, no. 40) worth 1,000 reales. Five other anonymous religious subjects were entailed to the estate along with a portrait of a gypsy, two flower-pieces, and a perspective painting (no. 88).

Remarkably, apart from Ribera, the only other Spanish artist named in the documents was Francisco Pérez Sierra, a painter active in Madrid in the second half of the seventeenth century who painted two battle pictures (Doc. 91, no. 33 and Doc. 92, no. 15) and a painting of the archangel St. Michael (Doc. 91, no. 51 and Doc. 92, no. 30). The inventory listed paintings by three of the most famous masters of the Italian Renaissance, Raphael (nos. 68, 92, 95), Parmigianino (no. 67), and Titian (no. 91). Apart from the entailed Raphael Madonna (no. 68), there was a copy of the Madonna of the Fish in the Prado (no. 9), one of the most famous Raphaels in the royal collection, which had come to Spain in 1658 with the Viceroy of Naples, the Duque de Medina de las Torres. A Christ Carrying the Cross (no. 92) said to be by Raphael was the most highly valued painting in the appraisal (Doc. 92, no. 67), worth 6,000 reales, and was perhaps a version of the Fall on the Road to Calvary in the Prado. It was protected by a curtain hanging in front of it, as was the Ecce Homo by Titian which may have hung near it (no. 91), valued at 1,100 reales (Doc. 92, no. 66). It is surprising, perhaps, that pictures of this importance should not also have been entailed to the estate.

The inventory of De la Torre's collection listed Italian landscape paintings by an unidentified painter Carbonelli (no. 22), a St. Michael copied after Guido Reni (no. 19), an Elijah by Poussin (no. 23), an Orpheus by Jan "Velvet" Brueghel (Doc. 91, no. 63; Doc. 92, no. 42), and a copy after Van Dyck's Descent from the Cross (no. 100). In the appraisal, Matias de Torres recognized a painting by Abraham Bloemart (Doc. 92, no. 41) and a pair of flower paintings by the specialist Mario Nuzzi (Doc. 92, no. 64) which complemented a Flemish Madonna in a garland by Daniel Seghers (Doc. 91, no. 30; Doc. 92, no. 13).

Antonio Mesía de Tovar, Conde de Molina

The postmortem inventory of D. Antonio Mesía de Tovar, Conde de Molina (d. 30 November 1674), was drawn up by D. Francisco Ruíz, royal secretary in Madrid from 6 December 1674, with his extensive picture collection inventoried on 21 December (ff. 386–397).<sup>1</sup> The valuation of moveable goods (bienes muebles) began on 2 January 1675 (ff. 419–498v), with the pictures valued between 2 and 4 January 1675 (ff. 419v–439) by the painters Don Francisco de Herrera and Andrés Smidt. After the public sale of Molina's goods had opened, the majority of the paintings remained unsold because of the high reserve values set by these artists. Consequently a third painter, Antonio de Pereda, reappraised the works and lowered their original values to ensure their sale (ff. 499–510, 5 February 1675). Molina's sale was resumed on 21 January 1675, and attracted some of the most distinguished connoisseurs of the time, including the Almirante de Castilla and the Condestable de Castilla.

Molina's collection boasted paintings attributed to famous old masters of the sixteenth century – the Venetian artists Titian, Veronese, Tintoretto, and Palma and, perhaps, a painting by Correggio (no. 91), as well as a valuable Dürer (no. 83) – all names that had assumed canonical status in the minds of connoisseurs in the period. Only two Spanish artists were mentioned, Juan Bautista del Mayno (no. 76) and the battle painter Juan de Toledo (no. 103), whose painting was worth half of one by Borgognone (no. 46). This was, however, one of the most important collections of northern paintings in the capital. More than 20 Flemish artists are listed in Molina's inventory, and the collection even included portraits by the English artist Sir Peter Lely (nos. 113, 135).

The fact that the inventory discriminates between so many northern hands and identifies a range of foreign artists – some of which are difficult to identify today – reflects Molina's connoisseurship. Molina only owned copies after works by Rubens (no. 36) and Van Dyck (no. 172), but had originals by very famous masters of the caliber of David Teniers the Younger (nos. 48, 155) and Velvet Brueghel, including an important set of four paintings on copper of the Last Judgement, Heaven and Hell, and The Flood worth nearly 10,000 reales (no. 162). Molina appears to have had a taste for small copper panel paintings by Flemish artists in the so-called "minor genres". Thus his collection included many Flemish landscapes painted by masters such as Jacques d'Arthois and Adriaen Pietersz van de Venne, as well as Dutch and Italian examples. The Italian paintings included landscapes by Francesco Banelli (no. 17), active in the early part of the century. There were also Flemish paintings of the Seasons (no. 137), still lifes, and flower paintings and garlands by well-known specialists in this field such as Jan van Kessel (I), Jan Linsen, and Frans Ijckens, as well as ten bird still lifes by an unidentified artist, "Allaert," who was also a Dominican priest. Genre scenes in the collection included one by Adriaen Brouwer (no. 13), and also a valuable picture described as a "sale of paintings" (no. 148), which might have depicted a painting gallery.

2. This appears to be a copy of Titian's Allocation of Alfonso d'Avalos, Marchese del Vasto (Fig. 55) in the Prado (417). The Prado picture has been in the royal collection since 1650 when it is known to have been purchased from Charles I of England for Philip IV.

The painter Juan de Espinosa valued the paintings in the postmortem inventory of Don Bartolomé Delgado on 1 May 1675. The valuation of this small collection of mostly religious subjects listed two paintings by the minor Madrid painter Mateo Orozco (fl. 1634–1652) (nos. 3 and 4) and a copy of Rubens's Adoration of the Kings (no. 5), which could well have derived from the well-known print after Rubens by Lucas Vorsterman. Ironically, the most highly valued painting, a Christ at the Column (no. 2), was listed anonymously. Delgado's set of 12 landscapes (no. 17) had been painted in Flanders, and the only profane subject was a Banquet of the Gods (no. 16).

The inventory of Don Gregorio Ortiz de Santecilla, Knight of Santiago and member of the king's council at his estate at Tarriva del Consejo de Nava, was drawn up by Don Joaquín de Leoz and begun in Madrid on 3 January 1676. The paintings were appraised by Andres de Smidt.

The collection consisted of approximately 70 to 80 paintings, all but five of which lacked the name of the author. Two battle scenes by Juan Bautista de Toledo and a copy after Falcone were valued at 330 and 440 reales, respectively (nos. 4, 5), and were apparently the most distinguished examples of this genre in the collection. A painting of Robbers given to an unidentified Brueghel (probably Jan Brueghel the Elder) was valued at 550 reales (no. 27). Two copies after Bassano and van Dyck are also listed (nos. 6, 8). But the most valuable works were anonymous and are found at the head of the inventory. The first item, a Rape of Proserpine, was valued at 11.000 reales, a very large sum, and an indication that this one painting was considered the star, since nothing else approached it. A depiction of St. Jerome was placed at 2200 reales (no. 58). The bulk of the collection was well below this figure.

As was usual, most of the paintings were of religious subjects, both biblical and devotional, but there was a wide variety of other things, including landscapes, still lifes and marine pictures.

The postmortem inventory of Don Manuel Monje, a member of the Consejo de Italia, the royal council that administered Spanish possessions in Italy, was drawn up by his colleagues in the royal administration, Don Andrés de la Torre, also of the Consejo de Italia, and Don Tomás de Valdés, of the Consejo Real; it began in Madrid on 11 October 1677. The inventoried pictures (ff. 521v–522) were valued on 29 October by the painter Juan de Espinosa (ff. 546–548).

The Italian paintings and objects listed in Monje's small collection suggest that he had spent time in the foreign service in Sicily. The inventory specifies that a set of large perspective paintings were painted in Palermo (no. 1). Six landscape paintings were identified as the work of the Palermo painter Giuseppe Costantino (no. 4), and paintings of Christ and the Samaritan Woman (no. 2) and Christ before Pilate (no. 3) were said to be both copied from originals in Palermo by one "Bruno". Two screens (nos. 6, 7) had also been made in Naples and Termenes (Sicily), respectively. Monje's particular taste for landscape paintings had also led him to acquire a set of 12 works by Don Lorenzo de Soto (ca. 1634–ca. 1685), a Madrid-based specialist in this genre, which were listed in his inventory ("Doce Paisés de Arboledas Y figuras echos en madrid por D<sup>n</sup> lorenzo de sotto de dos Varas en m.<sup>co</sup> Negro") but which were, inexplicably, omitted from Espinosa's valuation of the collection. The paintings listed as four "Paisés de flandes" (no. 5) were most probably four still-life paintings of an oblong format (apaisado), which were listed in the inventory depicting musical instruments, fruit, clothing, and arms.

The postmortem inventory of the royal silversmith Luis de Zabalza (d. 23 December 1677), Platero de Cámara de Su Majestad from 1642, was drawn up by his widow María de Aguilar and the other executors of his will, licenciado Don Tomás Rosete, Simon Navarro, and Matias de Acevedo, beginning on 29 December 1677.<sup>1</sup> The inventoried paintings were valued on 5 February 1678, by Andrés Smidt, a German painter at the Spanish court. Oddly, the attributed pictures were listed in the inventory rather than in Smidt's valuation; this information has been appended to the relevant entries in brackets.

The majority of Zabalza's paintings were of religious subjects, including four Immaculate Conceptions (nos. 5, 19, 34, 43), and only a handful of secular subjects, including genre pictures (no. 2, 21, 22), seascapes (no. 4), and still lifes (nos. 23, 26). The fact that only two mythological subjects were listed (nos. 13, 42) would seem to confirm Zabalza's devout taste, although the painting of a bacchanal is likely to be the painting listed as "a fable of the goddesses" in the inventory and may well have depicted female nudes.

This document identified a series of small panels by Albrecht Dürer (no. 1). There was a genre scene painted on copper by Pieter van Laer (no. 2), the Flemish artist working in Rome, as well as a Flemish picture on copper of Mary Magdalene (no. 57). The artist identified as "Valdi," who painted a Descent from the Cross (no. 7) and a portrait (no. 18), may refer to either the Tuscan artist at the Spanish court, Angelo Nardi, or perhaps a garbled form of Van Dyck. The other dozen attributed paintings in the collection represented the major painters active in Madrid during Zabalza's life. A number of valuable works listed anonymously in the document may also have been painted by such artists. Clearly an important collector of contemporary paintings, Zabalza would also be a significant patron if we could determine that his works had been commissioned from the artists themselves.

Among the older of the artists represented in the collection was Diego Velázquez himself, who was, it was believed, the author of Zabalza's portrait of Philip IV (no. 17), an image explained by Zabalza's royal appointment as silversmith to the king's chamber. Pedro Núñez del Valle (ca. 1594–1654?) painted a Mystic Marriage of St. Catherine, which was listed first among the paintings inventoried on 29 December 1677 ("Un lienzo del Desposorio de s.ta Cathalina con marco negro Moldura dorada de mano de Pedro Nuñez - y no tiene la Moldura dorada," f. 243). Of the four paintings of this subject listed anonymously in the valuation (nos. 14, 20, 32, 56), it is most likely to correspond to the version in a black frame valued at 250 reales (no. 20). The size of another version of the subject attributed to Mateo Cerezo (1637–1666) in the inventory corresponds with the painting valued at 3,600 reales in Smidt's valuation (no. 14). He evidently thought highly of this work, which could be the painting of almost exactly the same measurements signed and dated 1660 and now in the Prado, or a version of this.<sup>2</sup>

The short-lived Mateo Cerezo was represented by two more paintings, a St. Michael (no. 6) and a modestly valued Immaculate Conception (no. 43); another short-lived painter of his generation, Juan Antonio de Frías y Escalante (1633–1669), was represented by two pictures (nos. 11, 12). There was an Entombment by Francisco Camilo (ca. 1615–1673) (no. 37), whose naturalism was remarked on in the inventory ("otro lienzo del sepulcro de christo de cuerpo natural con marco negro de mano de camilo"), as was another anonymous St. Jerome "al natural". Camilo's painting was, perhaps, related to the painting now in the Museo de Bellas Artes, Valencia.<sup>3</sup> Although works of Francisco Rizi (1614–1685) are, perhaps, conspicuous by their absence, they may be among pictures listed anonymously in the documents. Three paintings, however, were by the hand of the royal painter Juan Carreño de Miranda; one was copied after Titian's Lucretia (no. 16), another was a Virgin and Child (no. 15), and the most valuable of all was an Immaculate Conception (no. 5), valued at 5,500 reales. The most highly valued painting in the entire collection, however, was Alonso Cano's Christ at the Column (no. 8), worth 6,600 reales. The value of this work, as with Carreño's Immaculate Conception, could not depend only upon such factors as the picture's size or the number of figures represented, but must also have reflected aesthetic criteria such as Cano's skill in depicting the male nude, as well as Smidt's own admiration for the works of his peers. Carreño's Immaculate Conception (no. 5), Cerezo's Mystic Marriage of St. Catherine (no. 14), and Cano's Christ at the Column (no. 8) were purchased at Zabalza's almoneda by Don Sebastian de Soria; the former two paintings sold for 2,700 reales and 1,700 reales, respectively, on 7 February 1678 (ff. 301v–302), and the latter painting by Cano sold on 9 February for 3,300 reales (f. 306). These sale prices are consistent with others in the auction, in which all of the paintings were sold for roughly half of their appraised values. Soria also purchased Escalante's St. Joseph and the Christ Child (no. 11) and Diego Estella bought Escalante's Flight into Egypt (no. 12) on 11 February.

The five paintings by Cano, Carreño, Cerezo, and Escalante apparently entered the collection of Pedro de Vallejo (Doc. 98), but since Vallejo was not recorded as bidding at Zabalza's sale, he must have acquired the works almost immediately from Sebastián de Soria and Diego Estella, who may even have been his agents. Soria is also recorded buying a painting of a tavern scene, “un quadro de una osteria,” at the auction of Vallejo's paintings on 24 September 1678.

The postmortem inventory of Don Pedro de Vallejo (d. 8 August 1678) was drawn up by his widow D<sup>a</sup> Luisa de Geteialler y Usategui, and was begun in Madrid on 8 August 1678. The picture collection was valued by the royal painter Don Francisco Rizi on 13 September 1678, after which some paintings were sold at an estate auction that opened on 15 September; the rest of the collection was inherited by Vallejo's widow and two daughters. Vallejo's 18 battle paintings (nos. 8, 14, 22) reflect a particular taste for such works, but he also owned seascapes (nos. 20, 24), perspectives (no. 23), flowerpieces (no. 7), garlands containing religious images (no. 9), and even a Flemish tavern scene (no. 10).

The first five pictures are the only attributed paintings in Rizi's valuation of Vallejo's collection (nos. 1–5) and are, moreover, the most valuable pictures. They all appear to have come from the collection of the royal silversmith Luis de Zabalza, who had died at the end of 1677 (see Doc. 97). Thus Cano's Christ at the Column (no. 1) that is found at the head of Vallejo's valuation was also listed in the appraisal of Zabalza's collection (Doc. 97, no. 8), as was Vallejo's Immaculate Conception by Carreño (no. 2) (Doc. 97, no. 5), the two paintings by Escalante of the Flight into Egypt and St. Joseph with the Christ Child (nos. 3, 4) (Doc. 97, nos. 11, 12), and Mateo Cerezo's Mystic Marriage of St. Catherine (no. 5) (Doc. 97, no. 14). Comparing the valuations of the same pictures by Smidt and Rizi, the latter reduced the values of the paintings by Escalante and Cerezo by between 300 and 500 reales, and reduced the painting by Cano by 1,100 reales, while allowing the painting by his colleague Carreño to hold its original value. It is unclear, however, to what extent these changes may have been dictated by economic factors and currency fluctuations in the six months between the two appraisals.

The postmortem inventory of Doña Ana María de Lezama (d. 28 August 1678) was begun by licenciado D. Francisco Muñoz, a presbyter of Sigüenza Cathedral, in Madrid from 5 September 1678.<sup>1</sup> She was the daughter of Don Jerónimo de Lezama, secretary of the Consejo de Guerra, and widow of the Galician councillor Don Joseph Pardo de Figueroa, a member of the Consejo de Castilla and Consejo de Guerra, whom she married in 1650.<sup>2</sup> Pardo de Figueroa was nominated a member of the Consejo de Castilla directly by royal decree in 1659<sup>3</sup> and, given the favor shown him by the king and the high state office he occupied, it is not surprising that his loyalty should be expressed by a portrait of Philip IV, whose quality was such that it was attributed to Velázquez himself (no. 39).

The inventoried paintings (ff. 1173–1175v) were appraised in the same order by the painter Juan de Vega on 4 October 1678 (ff. 1199–1203v), except those that were bequeathed in Lezama's testament. It was recognized that three pictures were copied from Titian prototypes, an Entombment of Christ (no. 7) and a pair representing the Ecce Homo and Mater Dolorosa (nos. 20, 21), all of which were among the most reproduced of Titian's religious paintings in Spain. The Entombment measured 168 x 126 cm. and was hung in a carved and gilded frame, as were the following five religious paintings in the valuation (nos. 8–12), suggesting that they had been hung as a relatively uniform set of images. A certain deliberate order appears to have informed other paintings in the document; for instance, a Dormition of Mary Magdalene (no. 13) was followed by three female saints of the same size (nos. 14–16) and a pair of paintings of SS. Peter and Paul (nos. 17–18).

The inventory of the collection of Lezama and her husband perhaps suggests a certain sobriety to their taste. Although no mythological subjects were listed, there was a large painting of Cleopatra (no. 44). There were also still lifes and landscapes, and some of the latter expressed a link with the family's provincial origins. Two paintings represented the port town of Bilbao (no. 48), which Pardo de Figueroa and his wife must have known well, and another landscape that depicted hunting lands belonging to them in Vizcaya (no. 49) may also have evoked fond memories of visits and recreation. The copy of an imaginary landscape by Bassano (no. 25) was complemented by no less than three copies of paintings by the "Spanish Bassano," Pedro Orrente (nos. 40, 41, 42). The latter copies, among others documented in collections after 1650, reflect the continuing popularity of Orrente's paintings in the second half of the seventeenth century. In all probability, the set of paintings of the Story of David by Juan de la Corte (no. 43) represented small figures in extensive architectural settings, which was also probably the format of the "perspective" by Viviano Codazzi (no. 6) in the collection.

Lezama's inventory and valuation were written by the same notary, who simply copied his earlier picture descriptions in the inventory for the valuation transcribed here. Items 41 and 44 were miscopied from the inventory -- that is, he misread his earlier writing. These two items have the correct subject (as written in the inventory).

The postmortem combined inventory and valuation of the estate of Don Bartolomé de Legasa (d. 9 February 1679), a knight of the Order of Santiago, was drawn up by his widow Estefania de Espeleta y Verio and was begun on 23 February 1679.<sup>1</sup> Legasa was appointed as Secretario de Estado with responsibility for Italy in 1675, and from 1676 until the time of his death managed the secretariat of Italy exclusively.

The collection of some 96 paintings was appraised on 6 March by the Flemish painter Antonio van de Pere. Uncharacteristically, the collection appears to have contained no portraits. At the head of the document was a large Immaculate Conception by the royal painter Angelo Nardi (no. 1). A further five paintings by this artist (nos. 17, 18, 23, 24, 45) would suggest that he was a favorite of Legasa. The only other Spanish painters mentioned by name were Pedro de Orrente (nos. 14, 20) and the younger artist and flower specialist Juan de Arellano, who had painted a garland picture (no. 49). The collection also contained copies after the legendary old masters Raphael (no. 46) and Bassano (no. 22). Legasa owned a set of Flemish copies after Snyders hunting scenes (no. 2), perhaps in direct imitation of the grand collections of the king and his aristocrats, who sought expensive originals by this artist. They nevertheless formed a distinguished and valuable group of works in the collection, and must have made an extremely impressive display if they were hung together as the decoration of one room. Two of Legasa's genre paintings depicted Flemings and were most probably northern works (nos. 4, 36). The most highly valued painting in Legasa's entire collection, a large Venus and Adonis (no. 40), worth 3,300 reales, was also Flemish and was his only mythological narrative. There were six landscapes with ruins (nos. 42, 43) which may have depicted classical buildings, and representations of the classical subjects of Cleopatra (no. 8) and the Suicide of Seneca (no. 39). The story of Seneca's suicide illustrated the popular belief in stoicism among many educated individuals in the seventeenth century, and paintings of this subject by Rubens and assistants were in the collections of the Marqués de Leganés and the Buen Retiro.<sup>2</sup> Seneca's probity and austerity would have made him an admired model for ministers of state such as Legasa.

1. Legasa's inventory was published verbatim, with books and other goods in J.L. Barrio Moya, "El inventario de los bienes del hidalgo navarro Don Bartolomé de Legasa, consejero de Estado del Rey Carlos II (1679)," Letras de Deusto, vol. 18, no. 42 (1988), pp. 177–186.

On the death of María Inés Manrique de Lara, 10th Condesa de Paredes (d. 8 August 1679), her husband Don Vespasiano Gonzaga, Gentilhombre de Cámara of Philip IV and Charles II, Viceroy of Valencia and Capitán General de Andalucía, drew up an inventory of the estate, beginning in Madrid on 16 August 1679. The unfinished inventory lapsed and continued again three years later when the collection of paintings was inventoried between 28 and 29 August 1682. Interestingly, although he was styled the “Duque de Guastala” in the document, Vespasiano Gonzaga (1621–1687) did not possess this title. It belonged instead to his brother Ferrante III (1618–1678), Duca di Guastalla, a portrait of whom is recorded in this inventory (no. 127).<sup>1</sup>

In a display of allegiance to the Spanish crown, portraits of the family members (nos. 123, 127, 128) were hung alongside royal portraits of Philip IV, his two queens, and his family (nos. 121, 122, 124), as well as the Queen Mother and Charles II (no. 125). The sheer number of pictures inventoried here typifies the scale of aristocratic collections at court. While nobles typically bought large numbers of paintings because they could, and had large properties to furnish, it is also true that many of their collections were built up over different generations.

This collection numbered some 300 works. Despite the large number of religious subjects in the collection, the names of very few of their authors were specified. Two religious paintings were listed as Italian works (nos. 13, 53). There were older paintings in the style of Dürer (nos. 31, 34) and Rogier van der Weyden(?) (no. 32). A Virgin and Child was by Elisabetta Sirani (1638–1665) (no. 12), a female artist who was rare in Spanish collection inventories, and Pedro de Orrente was represented by two religious subjects (no. 49). Orrente was one of only two Spanish hands identified in the document. The other was the flower painter Gabriel de la Corte (1648–1694), who was represented by two garland pictures (no. 56). These seem to have been hung with a Flemish version of the subject (no. 55). An anonymous picture of tulips was said to be painted from nature (no. 76). It is interesting to note that Gabriel de la Corte was known to have painted garlands for other artists and for shops, but died in poverty, yet he had managed to attract the attention of this aristocratic client.<sup>2</sup>

The only mythological subject in the collection was said to be a copy of a Bacchus by Rubens (no. 67). Flemish painters had painted many of the decorative secular pictures too, such as two Flemish still lifes (no. 66). Among the Flemish seascapes (nos. 1, 2, 4), six were attributed to one “Sebastian Pietris” (no. 21). A number of the landscapes were described as Flemish works (nos. 6, 9), along with four Italian examples (no. 20). One set of 12 landscapes on panel was painted by Joos de Momper (1564–1635) (no. 3). Another, despite being “ordinary,” was attributed to one “Gabriel Brueghel” (no. 7). There was at least one battle picture by the Neapolitan specialist Aniello Falcone (no. 11). One of the perspectival pictures was also said to be an Italian painting (no. 27), while others listed anonymously may have been Spanish.

1. The Duca di Guastala title next passed to Ferrante III's son César in 1666; César had it until 1692, when it went to Ferrante III's cousin Vicente (1634–1714), who happened to be married to Ferrante III's daughter, Maria Victoria Gonzaga (1659–1707), his second wife.

2. Ceán Bermúdez 1800, vol. I, p. 364.

The combined inventory and valuation of the goods of María de Baeza, widow of Don Pablo Cani, was drawn up on 12 February 1680, on the occasion of her remarriage to Antonio Álvarez de Castro, at which time the paintings were appraised by Antonio Rojo Venturas, painter. The most highly valued picture in the document was a large Adoration of the Magi by the Neapolitan painter Massimo Stanzione (no. 21). A Beheading of St. John the Baptist was a copy after Rubens (no. 1), and three further religious subjects were said to be copies, without specifying their source (nos. 2, 3, 4). The document was not shy about listing four heads of Apostles as “pintura ordinaria” (no. 18). A pair of small pictures of the heads of Christ and the Virgin were attributed to Correggio (no. 11). The collection contained a set of half-length portraits of the house of Habsburg (no. 20), a bacchanal with putti (no. 14), and a number of landscapes painted in Flanders (nos. 7, 15, 24).

The paintings listed in the postmortem inventory of Don Joseph Márquez de Escalante, presbyter and Ayuda del Oratorio de la Reina, were appraised by the royal painter Francisco de Herrera the Younger on 2 March 1680. A number of paintings were sold privately from the estate to the Duque de Osuna for 25,000 reales. Despite Marquez's religious calling, his collection did include three paintings of the story of Diana (no. 24) and a picture "which they call the bachanal" (no. 15), perhaps a copy of Titian's Andrians (Madrid, Prado). More innocuous decorative subjects included still lifes, bodegones, and a set of eight valuable octagonal flower paintings (no. 3). There was a battle scene listed (no. 27), but only four landscapes, which represented the theme of the Four Seasons (no. 16). The document was headed by a set of eight scenes from Christ's Passion in perspectival settings painted by Viviano Codazzi (no. 1). The other attributed works in the collection were also religious subjects, the highest-valued of which was an Ecce Homo by Luis de Morales (no. 34), followed by saints painted by Ribera (no. 2) and unframed paintings of the Virgin and Christ by Juan de Carreño (no. 6), which Herrera, perhaps pointedly, valued lowest of all among the attributed Spanish pictures, at 150 reales apiece. One of the most valuable paintings in the collection was a representation of St. Theresa (no. 29), which appears to have decorated Márquez de Escalante's cell.

Gregorio Díaz de Quevedo y Barroso (d. 22 July 1680) was contador in the Consejo de las Órdenes and administered the tax of the media anata of the ecomienzas of the military Order of Santiago. He was not himself noble, but, judging from the postmortem inventory of his estate drawn up by his children and heirs, appears to have been wealthy.<sup>1</sup> His paintings were valued on 8 August 1680, by a painter, Francisco de Lizona (ff. 33–35). The collection of nearly 50 pictures comprised mostly religious subjects, except for six landscapes (no. 21) and paintings of the Senses and Continents by a single hand (no. 18). The document distinguishes between paintings on metal, most probably on copper, and those on stone (nos. 6, 14), wood panel, and canvas supports. There were also two figures of Christ painted on wooden crosses (nos. 19, 20), one of which was by Diego Polo (no. 19), who painted in a neo-Titianesque manner. The only other attributed paintings were also the most highly valued works in the collection (along with an anonymous Immaculate Conception, worth 1,500 reales [no. 12]). These were six copies on copper after religious subjects by Rubens, worth 1,500 reales each (no. 2), and four paintings said to be “originals from Italy by Guercino,” which were worth more than twice this amount (no. 1). Despite their disparate religious subjects, they were entered together as a group of paintings of the same size. While the large number of religious paintings in a small collection such as this suggests that their owner prized the devotional function of art, the attributions to artists of the caliber of Guercino, Rubens, and Polo also suggests that he was also not unaware of aesthetic merits.

I. J. L. Barrio Moya published the attributed paintings in this inventory, as well as the library in: "La librería y algunas pinturas de Don Gregorio Díaz de Quevedo, Contador de Carlos II en el Real Consejo de Ordenes," Revista Antiquaria, no. 10 (1985), pp. 40–43.

On the death of the wealthy jeweler Joseph de Lezana, tasador de joyas, his small painting collection was appraised by one Felipe de Silva, painter, on 10 January 1681. While Lezana's copy of Titian's Martyrdom of St. Lawrence (no. 2) is unremarkable in the context of the taste for Venetian old master paintings of the time, the subject is one of those least copied among Titian's works represented in Spanish collections at this time.<sup>1</sup> A curious aspect of the collection is the presence of unfinished paintings by Mateo Cerezo and Alonso Cano (no. 9). There were six works listed by Cerezo; an unframed Visitation (no. 12), four pictures specified as unfinished (nos. 3, 8, 10, 14), and one called "Un borriquilla" which was perhaps a sketch (no. 11). Lezana's most highly valued painting was a Nativity by Cerezo that was framed, although unfinished (no. 3), while two other unfinished Cerezos (nos. 8, 14) and the painting by Cano (no. 9) were without frames. Mateo Cerezo died prematurely in 1666; Lezana may have ordered works from him that were left unfinished on his death, or he may have bought these from the painter's estate. Although the degree of lack of finish is not specified, Lezana clearly did not have the pictures finished by another hand, and he appears to have displayed them in this state for at least fifteen years. This may suggest some positive appreciation of their "unfinished" qualities, which is not inconceivable in the context of the taste for the painterly style at court after the death of Velázquez.

Ana de Silva y Corella,
Condesa de Osona and Marquesa de Aytona

The present documents are the inventory and valuation of the estate of Doña Ana de Silva y Corella, Marquesa de Aytona, widow of Don Guillén Ramón de Moncada y Alagón, Señor de la Casa de Moncada, 4th Marqués de Aytona, Conde de Osona, Vizconde de Illa, Gran Senescal y Maestre Racional de Cataluña, Comendador de la Fresneda, Gentilhombre de la Cámara de Su Magestad y Mayordomo Mayor de la Reina, Grande de España. Doña Ana died 11 July 1680; Don Guillén had died in 1670.

The inventory was drawn up by Doña Guiomar de Silva, Duquesa de Alba, and by Don Melchor de Navarra Rocafull, “del Consejo de Estado de SM,” and Don Francisco de Borja, “Arced[ec]ano Mayor de la S<sup>ta</sup> Iglesia de Valencia,” between 17 July 1680, and 11 February 1682. The paintings were appraised on 12–14 June 1681 by Alonso del Arco, painter and sculptor, with the library appraised 18 August 1681.

An almoneda followed, 3 March–30 April 1682; among the buyers were Luis de Cartagena, Pedro Calderon, Pedro Sánchez, Francisco Pardo, Melchor Ladrón de Imevara, Joseph de Salamanca, Alonso Rodriguez, Melchor de Guevara, Roque Suarez, Mendo de Foix, with a group of paintings sold to Leviño Palenque, “Archer of SM,” 14 November 1684. The remaining estate was partitioned at Madrid, 22 January 1691, the eldest son and heir being Don Miguel Ramón de Moncada y Silva, who married Doña Luisa Felician Portocarrero y Meneses, Duquesa de Camiña, Marquesa de Villarreal, y Condesa de Medellín.

Joseph Salvador Sarmiento, Conde de Salvatierra and Marqués del Sobroso

The postmortem inventory of Don Joseph Salvador Sarmiento, Conde de Salvatierra, Marqués de Sobroso, was begun in Madrid, on 3 May 1681, by his executors and widow, María Antonia Sarmiento y Velasco. The paintings collection was inventoried on 4 December and valued by the painter Antonio Palomino on 8 April 1682. Included in the collection were the paintings inherited from his grandfather, Diego Sarmiento, Conde de Salvatierra. In the partition of the estate, Don Joseph's collection was inherited by his own son Joseph Francisco Sarmiento y Mendoza, Conde de Salvatierra.

Uncharacteristically for an aristocratic collection, Salvatierra's inventory listed no series of family portraits. The most highly valued painting in the entire collection, however, was an equestrian portrait of the Cardinal-Infante Ferdinand (no. 24) by Van Dyck, worth 5,500 reales. This may have been one of the versions of Rubens's portrait of this sitter painted in 1634 (Madrid, Prado). Other royal portraits in the collection (nos. 73, 75) were valued at only a fraction of this amount.

Palomino recognized that one of the paintings was a copy of Titian's St. Margaret (no. 43), probably the version at the Escorial. He also noted the distinctive hand of the Bassano family in nine pictures (nos. 2, 37, 44, 47, 69), although two paintings were copies and only one (no. 69) was explicitly stated to be an original. Interestingly, this latter painting of the Agony in the Garden may have been paired with a painting of the same size of the Supper at Emmaus (no. 70) by the "Spanish Bassano," Pedro Orrente. There was a painting by the sixteenth-century artist Luis de Morales (no. 72) and a picture by Eugenio Caxés of St. Jerome Flagellated by Angels (no. 66), but the works of the younger generation of painters in Madrid are conspicuous by their absence in Palomino's valuation. There were, however, representative examples of works in the minor genres. Salvatierra owned 41 still lifes and bodegones, and five much less valuable flowerpieces; this large number was perhaps due to the need to decorate the many large rooms in his Madrid residence. No fewer than ten still lifes by Ignacio Arias were listed in the collection (nos. 3, 26). This now obscure artist was a promising still-life painter who was married in 1636,<sup>1</sup> but died prematurely in 1653. Consequently, his works may have been somewhat rare.<sup>2</sup>

Salvatierra's still life by Frans Snyders (no. 51), as well as his painting of the goddess Ceres with fruit (no. 23), was worth nearly twice as much as those by Arias. The difference in value is in fact consistent with aristocratic and royal taste for still lifes throughout the period. While the collection contained at least four Flemish landscapes (no. 13), valued at 50 reales each, Palomino evidently thought highly of José Antolínez's example in the genre, valuing his landscape at three times the amount (no. 22). The battle painter Juan Bautista de Toledo was represented by six examples of his specialization (nos. 14, 15, 16, 57) as well as three seascapes (no. 46). Viviano Codazzi, who was a recognized specialist in the popular genre of perspectival paintings and enjoyed a large export market, was represented by three examples in Salvatierra's collection (no. 48). While many aristocratic collectors indulged a taste for mythological subjects, Salvatierra's inventory identified only a few such paintings: Snyders' painting of the goddess Ceres, mentioned above, an unusual pair of oval paintings depicting the story of Hermaphrodite (no. 41), and a scene of nymphs hunting that may have represented Diana (no. 49).

1. Madrid, Parroquia de San Sebastián, Libro de matrimonios 6, f. 269v, 25 December 1636.

2. See Pérez Sánchez, Pintura española de bodegones y floreros de 1600 a Goya, Madrid, 1983, p. 97. The paintings listed as bodegones in this collection were probably of a type exemplified by Arias's Kitchen Still Life in the Naseiro Collection in Madrid.

The postmortem inventory of the estate of the Basque merchant Juan Bautista de Zavala was drawn up by his widow María de Castellanos and Don Domingo Ruíz de Mazmela, knight of the Order of Santiago and royal secretary. The valuations of Zavala's goods in Madrid began on 1 July 1682, with the paintings appraised by the painter and royal architect Don Francisco de Herrera on 3 July.<sup>1</sup> Zavala's estate was partitioned among his heirs by a document signed on 4 August 1684, in which most of his picture collection was entailed to a mayorazgo founded by the deceased in his testament of 19 January 1682. In his testament, Zavala made a bequest of money for the marriage of girls of his lineage in Salinas de Leniz, the town where he was born.

The painting that headed Herrera's appraisal was a large picture of a wedding ceremony around the ancient tree of Guernica (no. 1), which was probably a subject close to the heart of this Basque collector living at court. Although the collection valuation listed portraits of Philip IV and Queen Isabella (nos. 3, 4), the Conde-Duque de Olivares (no. 75), and the Queen of Hungary (no. 45), it identified no portraits of Zavala and his own family. Zavala's two relatively valuable paintings of the Alcázar of Toledo (no. 42) and the city of Toledo (no. 51) must reflect his Toledan connections, either through family or business. Although Francisco de Herrera did not give the authors of any of Zavala's paintings, the comparatively high values of some of these suggest that they were of considerable quality.

Herrera was one of the most cultivated artists at the Spanish court, but he did not choose to exercise his learning and experience to clarify the subject matter of six paintings in the valuation (nos. 2, 7, 16, 28, 34, 55). However, this may be a consequence of the inventory process itself – the ignorance of the scribe rather than the artist; the list of paintings to be appraised was copied from the inventory and in the absence of Herrera, who simply appended his valuations to a ready-prepared document. One painting, described as a woman with an arrow and a headdress of a half moon (no. 2), probably represented Diana. The literal description of another with a nude woman beside a fountain and two old men behind (no. 7) suggests the story of Susanna and the Elders. Another two paintings representing nude figures (nos. 16, 34) may have dealt with more obscure allegorical or mythological subjects. The figure of Death with his scythe in another painting (no. 61) was, however, unmistakable to all concerned.

Marqués del Carpio, Marqués de Eliche, Duque de Montoro, Conde-Duque de Olivares and Conde de Morente

1682–1683

Don Gaspar's activities as an ambassador in Rome, including his central role as a patron of contemporary painters, his relationship with Padre Sebastiano Resta, his sponsorship of an informal academy, his patronage of Carlo Maratta, and his admiration for Bernini, not to mention Luca Giordano and a host of less well-known masters, are detailed above in the Introduction.

The inventory that Don Gaspar took in Rome upon his promotion to the Viceroyalty of Naples in 1682 illuminates his activities both as a diplomat and as a patron. Item nos. 958 and 959, for example, list works depicting two public events sponsored by Don Gaspar: a cavalcade from the first year of his residence in Rome, and a celebration in St. Peter's, which had been decorated with Damascene hangings for "la funzione che farea sua excellenza innanzi a Sua Santità nel presentare l' Arch." Spectacles were, of course, a necessary part of the duties of any ambassador, as seen, for example, in the case of the Duque de Pastrana (discussed in the introduction). Don Gaspar's responsibilities at the Buen Retiro would have prepared him for these activities.

The inventory also lists the names of various persons who had given pictures to Don Gaspar during his residence in Rome. These donors included Padre Resta (nos. 30, 447, 610, 767, 846, 910), a number of noblemen, a Milanese senator (Count Hercules Visconti), and the Cardinals Raggi (no. 738), Garafà (no. 469), Portocarrero (no. 311), Savelli (nos. 866, 586), and Pio (nos. 195, 312, 857) – among others. Resta was, as has already been mentioned, a member of Don Gaspar's "platonic academy." His gifts of pictures to Don Gaspar imply that Resta may have been an important influence on the development of the collection.<sup>1</sup> Cardinal Pio's gift, on the other hand, comes as something of a surprise. Since Pio, along with Cardinal Cybo, is supposed to have opposed Don Gaspar in the early years of his embassy, even sending armed guards in an effort to frighten him.<sup>2</sup> Perhaps Don Gaspar had subsequently won the cardinal's friendship. A more important donor was Pope Innocent XI, who, upon Don Gaspar's departure for Naples, presented him with an Adoration of the Shepherds by Parmigianino, along with a "copiosa" indulgence expressed in a Papal Brief (see no. 989). One further gift is not recorded in the inventory. Bellori mentions two allegorical works, a painting and a sculpture, both half-figures, painted by Maratta for Cardinal Savelli, who subsequently gave them to Don Gaspar during his tenure in Naples.<sup>3</sup>

The 1682 Roman inventory also serves to remind us of the new political order emerging in the second half of the seventeenth century. Don Gaspar's notary, Jaime Antonio (i.e., Jacques-Antoine) Redoutey, was a native of Besançon, a free imperial city located in the Franche Comté, a Spanish Hapsburg fiefdom that but it passed into French hands in 1674. The Carpio library in Rome (ff. 177–214 in the 1682 inventory) contained large numbers of French books, and pictures by French artists (Poussin, Dughet, Claude Lorraine, Regnier, Vouet, and Mignard) and non-French artists associated with French patronage (Van der Cable, Tinelli, and Sassoferrato) figure prominently in the collection. Don Gaspar's wife and daughter appear in portraits vestite alla francese (nos. 208, 209). In short, Don Gaspar's inventory points to the ever-increasing French hegemony over Europe in the age of Louis XIV – and the concomitant shrinking of Spanish power.<sup>4</sup>

Certain other qualities of the document itself reveal important aspects of Don Gaspar's career as a collector. In the first place, the inventory is written in a beautiful, clear hand, which is generally as legible as a printed text. It is as if Don Gaspar held his pictures in such esteem that even the recording of them had to be a work of art. The inventory was taken by Redoutey and by "Joseph Pinachi Pintor" – that is, by Giuseppe Pinacci (1642–1718), a Siense painter active in Florence and Rome. Resta, in the letter of 1704 already cited above, described Pinacci as his “colleague” in Don Gaspar’s scuola platonica. Resta also complimented Pinacci’s skill as a restorer, which Don Gaspar would obviously have found useful. Even more useful, however, was Pinacci’s knowledge of art history, much of which is revealed in the entries of the 1682 inventory.

An unusual erudition is shown, for instance, in speaking of a pair of panels attributed to Giotto and Cimabue (no. 514); the inventory notes that they are “ambi due insieme stimati per la memoria de’ principij della pittura de’ nostri ultimi quattrosecole, e non per altro.” Even if Pinacci and his colleagues doubted the artistic value of the two works, they – and presumably, Don Gaspar – appreciated the pieces’ historical interest. On a more subtle level, the inventory distinguishes between the early and late styles of Reni (cf. no. 795), and recognizes the late phases of Correggio’s and Lotto’s work (nos. 988 and 990 – the inventory speaks of Correggio’s “ultimate perfection”). The inventory notes when Barocci and Annibale Carracci are imitating Correggio (nos. 427, 677, 972, 975, 976); when Poussin is imitating Titian (no. 905); when Perino del Vaga, is imitating Raphael (no. 672); or when “a Fleming” is imitating Parmigianino (no. 380). In citing the work of a lesser-known painter such as Gessi, the inventory notes, as we have seen, that Gessi was a pupil of Reni (no. 784). Nor do women artists escape this expertise. The inventory cites Sofonisba Anguisciola’s study with Campi (no. 596), and gives a thumbnail biography of the Milanese still life specialist, Domenica Macagna (no. 695). On the other hand, Pinacci and his colleagues did not always have the requisite information at hand. Some of the attributions are left uncertain: there are unresolved choices between Palma Giovane and the younger Tintoretto, and between Lelio da Novellara and Parmigianino (nos. 509, 525).

To what extent are the attributions found in the 1682 collection trustworthy? This question cannot be definitively answered until many more of the works are located and appraised, but some evidence – apart from what is found in the inventories themselves – suggests that many of Don Gaspar’s pictures bore unrealistic attributions. For example, among the letters exchanged between Don Gaspar’s heir, Doña Catalina, and her agents in Naples was a candid assessment by one Esteban Carrillo of the average standard of quality in Don Gaspar’s collection.<sup>5</sup> Carrillo was, by his own admission, relying on the opinions of others, but he nevertheless recorded what seems to have been the widespread opinion that Don Gaspar had seriously overestimated both the artistic and monetary value of many of the works in his collection. Furthermore, Carrillo noted, many of the paintings were portraits, which, even if by famous artists, were of limited appeal to collectors. Carrillo cautioned the marquesa that much of the poor opinion surrounding the collection might have been due to the designs of those who sought to cheat her by artificially devaluing the works, but he made it clear that doubts about the quality of Don Gaspar’s pictures had been raised.

These doubts are corroborated by several aspects of the inventory of 1682. For example, an abundance of portraits obviously graced Don Gaspar’s galleries. Furthermore, Pinacci and Redoutey seem to have shared Carrillo’s skepticism. Indeed, they may be said to have “corrected” the ambitious attributions given in the inventory by means of the prices they set on each piece.

Of course, market factors, the actual prices paid for works, various aesthetic prejudices, and the occasional interference of Don Gaspar might have influenced Pinacci and Redoutey’s decisions. All of these considerations, however, would have tended to inflate rather than deflate prices. Therefore, if high valuations may be taken to infer Pinacci’s agreement with a given attribution, low prices may be assumed to certify his doubts. For example, dozens of small portraits attributed to “Jacomo Tintoretto” appear in the inventory with valuations from 15 to 50 scudi (all about 4 palmi square). Other Tintoretto portraits, such as the slightly larger Portrait of a Woman (no. 291, 6 x ~4 palmi; appraised at 400), bear much higher prices. Presumably, the lower-priced works were of doubtful authenticity. In a like manner, highly appraised works attributed to Titian, such as the Weeping Magdalene at 400 scudi (no. 468; only 2 palmi high) and a Portrait of a Young Man at 200 scudi (no. 327; 2½ x 2 palmi), call the attributions of similar portraits with much lower prices into question (nos. 97, 347, 366, 406). We may also assume that an attribution to Leonardo da Vinci appraised at only 6 scudi was almost certainly being rejected, while an attribution to Correggio for 4,000 (no. 988) was being enthusiastically affirmed. Similarly, the high valuations placed on works only “thought to be by the hand of” Veronese (no. 402), or which “they say is by the hand of Titian,” (no. 472) indicate that these attributions had found some acceptance at the time of the inventory. Perhaps mixing high prices with uncertain attributions was Pinacci’s way of advancing his own ideas on a work’s authorship.

In one case, the prices in the inventory confirm a well-known fact about the art market in seventeenth-century Rome. Although the last half of the century was in general a time of diminishing expectations for many painters,<sup>6</sup> Carlo Maratta seems to have priced his works against the prevailing deflationary trend. Bellori cited with approbation the sharp increase in the amount Maratta asked for a work: a full-length portrait, for example, cost 150 scudi.<sup>7</sup> The 1682 Carpio inventory shows that, in spite of economic decline, works by Maratta actually did command prices up to 500 scudi – comparable to those assigned to works securely (as it was thought) attributed to Titian.

Equally high were the prices on many of the still-life compositions, landscapes, and genre. For example, a pair of flower pieces with putti by Abraham Brueghel (no. 221) were appraised, perhaps because of their very large size, at 300 scudi per canvas. Works by Mario dei Fiori (no. 192) were appraised at 150 apiece and were matched by (commissioned?) canvases at 100 apiece by Paoluccio Napoletano (no. 193). Landscapes by Crescenzi with figures by Maratta brought 125 scudi; others by Adrian Van der Cabel and Anton de Wael are worth 100 each (no. 923). These values seem significantly elevated in comparison to those in earlier inventories, such as the Monterrey inventory of 1653, in which, as Pérez Sánchez has noted, extremely low prices were assigned to landscapes and still-lives.<sup>8</sup> The higher values given in the Carpio collection are a measure both of Don Gaspar’s emphasis on connoisseurship and the rise in status of “the genres” during the seventeenth century. (A dubious attribution, on the other hand, could quickly deflate prices, eg. nos. 85, 117, 124, 135, 198, 201, 282, 526, 547, etc. are small still lifes with apparently questionable attributions to Caravaggio appraised at very low values.)

Finally, the prices assigned by Pinacci and Redouté tell us something about the quality of the collection as a whole, at least in terms of the standards of the age. It is clear, for example, that Don Gaspar acquired a great many dubiously or generously attributed works of art. At the same time, however, almost 200 works were appraised at 100 scudi or more. Thus, about one painting in six was considered to be of high quality. As with the collection in Madrid, we may assume that there were many pictures that today would be considered “museum-quality.” Indeed, our standards may not be as high as Pinacci’s: portraits by Velázquez listed at 50 scudi each (nos. 390, 391) would be valued in the millions of dollars today.

If we look at the pictures from the 1682 inventory that can be identified today, we see the same mix of quality implied in the documents. For example, Correggio’s Madonna del Latte (now Szépművészeti Múzeum, Budapest) seems to be item no. 988 in Don Gaspar’s 1682 inventory: a Nursing Madonna enthusiastically attributed to Correggio. As has been noted, this work was engraved by Teresa del Pò in the 1680s with an inscription stating that the picture was acquired in Rome from Muzio Orsini. Pinacci’s entry in the inventory confuses the small angel in the composition with the infant St. John but nevertheless elaborates upon the picture’s history, describing it as “the most celebrated picture in Rome whose loss was threatened by various mishaps; it was the major acquisition and the most glorious triumph of the great gallery of His Excellency.”

As Pò’s engraving demonstrates, Don Gaspar’s panel was identical in composition and size with the Budapest picture, and the price (4,000 scudi) and notoriety, as mentioned in the inventory, further suggest that Don Gaspar owned the original, not a later copy such as that now in Leningrad.<sup>9</sup> However, the history of the Budapest picture is by no means complete.<sup>10</sup>

The 1682 inventory also records a series of copies after Correggio by Annibale Carracci (nos. 972, 975, 976, and probably 973, 974).<sup>11</sup> This would suggest that Don Gaspar knew the difference between an original and a copy. Other attributions, however, have run afoul of modern scholarship.<sup>12</sup> In short, Don Gaspar seems to have cast his net widely, pulling in both mediocrity and excellence.

The document does not follow a uniform policy with regard to measurements. All are given in palmi romani (ca. 22.3 cms.), but height does not always precede width. Rather, the larger dimension is usually given first. The currency used is scudi.

Folios 2v–156[e]v of the inventory record paintings that are numbered from 1–1162. At the end of the inventory, there are five folios numbered 156. We have appended the letters a–e in brackets to these folios to indicate their order in the document. At ff. 157–159 is a list of persons who had given works to the Marqués. This list seems to have been made at a later time than the inventory, as it is not only written in a different hand, but is in Spanish. The preamble for it reads “Memoria de los Cuadros que han sido presentados por los infrascritos señores à su Excelencia arriba Inventariados poniendose aqui el Numero de cada uno como van puestos en el antecedente Inventario, que va Junto con este Inventario general, y en el se veran Las Historias, y los Autores de cada uno para mayor claridad,” and the list of persons is given in two sections, the first being Milan, the second Rome. This information has been appended to the relevant entries as annotations. Folios 161ff. contain statues, books, and household effects; some of the sculptures are recorded as having been purchased from Cardinal Massimi. Finally, at ff. 241–376 are packing lists.

1. Other evidence suggests that Resta may have helped Don Gaspar develop his appreciation of the works of Correggio.

Poussin was not the only French artist on Don Gaspar's list to play an important role in the development of classicizing art; Pierre Mignard has also been shown to have influenced this style at mid-century. 9. See C. Gould, The Paintings of Correggio (Ithaca, 1976), pp. 196–99, for a detailed discussion of the provenance of the Budapest and Leningrad pictures.

10. Prado no. 112, with provenance to Isabel Farnese's collection at La Granja (Prado 1972, p. 157). Van Dyck's St. Francis, also from the Carpio collection, was said by Prado 1972, p. 183, to have been an acquisition of Isabel Farnese in Seville. There may be a connection, therefore, between pictures in the royal collection with provenance to Isabel Farnese and the Carpio collection – it is even possible that a group of Don Gaspar's paintings were sent to Parma. See also Doc. 114, nos. 85 which may be tentatively identified with the panel in the Prado. Doc. 114, nos. 42 and 98 are copies after Correggio of the same subject.

11. Pictures in Parma and Naples purporting to be copies by the Carracci after Correggio's frescoes and other works are cited (without much enthusiasm) by Posner (1971, vol. 1, p. 157, note 22, and p. 167, note 76); see also Gould 1976, p. 237.

12. For example, the Weeping Magdalene, attributed to Titian and said to be “taken from life as a model for the other one that is, another version,” in the 1682 inventory (Doc. 109, no. 468), is certainly the work now in the collection of the Duke of Portland, Nottingham.

Harold Wethey has called the Portland work a copy after the original in the Pitti Palace, Florence (Pinacci called it a study). Wethey 1969,

- vol. 1, p. 144. The Portland work is on paper, is of the same size as Don Gaspar's no. 511, and bears Don Gaspar's monogram.
13. Now in the Musée d'Art et d'Histoire, Chambéry and recently published with an attribution to Bartolomeo Passarotti, this canvas has DGH 172 inscribed on the reverse.
14. Although the dimensions given here are significantly larger, Mauro Natale (written correspondence to the Provenance Index, December 1996) has identified this picture with St. Justine(?) as a Personification of Chastity attributed to Giorgione in the Rijksmuseum (A 3970).
15. This picture has been identified by Mauro Natale (written correspondence to the Provenance Index, December 1996) with a picture in the Musée d'Art et d'Histoire, Chambéry now attributed to Bartolomeo Passarotti.
16. This picture can be identified with Mario Nuzzi's Self-Portrait in the Uffizi (no. A576) which is known to have come from the Carpio collection, Naples, although its dimensions are larger than those given here.
17. Giordano's The Genius of Rubens (Fig. 56), in the Prado (190).
18. Vélazquez Monsignor Camillo Massimi (Fig. 57), Kingston Lacy, Dorset (The National Trust, No. 87).
19. Domenico Tintoretto, Venus and Mars with Cupid and the Three Graces in a Landscape (Fig. 58), The Art Institute of Chicago (1929.914). Inscribed on the reverse of this canvas is the Carpio monogram DGH, as well as the inventory numbers 467 and 1406 (Fig. 59). Although the numbers do not completely agree, the identification must be correct; the number 1406 corresponds to Carpio's 1687 Naples inventory (see Doc. 114, no. 201).
20. This picture passed through Sotheby's, London, on December 6, 1989, lot no. 199, attributed to circle of Lelio Orsi (Fig. 60). In 1990 it was at Nella Longari, Milan.
21. Giuseppe Cesari (Cavalier d'Arpino), Joseph with Potiphar's Wife (Fig. 61), Whitfield Fine Art Limited, London in 1993. The reverse of the picture has the DGH monogram and the number 484 burnt into the walnut panel.
22. After Don Gaspar's death in 1687, Titian's Penitent Magdalene was purchased by the 1st Duke of Portland, and is still in the Duke of Portland collection, Welbeck Abbey, Nottingham, with the DGH monogram and number 511 on the reverse.
23. Parmigianino's Mystic Marriage of Saint Catherine (Fig. 62), Louvre (RF 1992-411) which has the DGH mark and 519 on the reverse.
24. This work, Madonna and Child with Saint John the Baptist (Fig. 63), now attributed by Burton Fredericksen to Catena, is currently owned by Trafalgar Galleries in London. It has the Carpio monogram as well as an inventory number on the reverse.
25. Now attributed to Francesco Vanni, The Holy Family with the Infant Saint John the Baptist stayed in Carpio's family until the mid-nineteenth century. It was sold at Christie's, London, December 11, 1981, lot no. 19, by Colonel B.C.A. Napier, whose grandfather had purchased it from the 15th Duque de Alba in Naples in 1848/49. This work is inscribed with the inventory mark of Carpio on the reverse.
26. This picture was originally the lid of a chest and passed through Christie's, London, July 22, 1988, lot no. 146, as Lanfranco. It has Carpio's monogram stamped on the reverse.
27. Antonello da Messina, Christ Crowned with Thorns (Fig. 65), Metropolitan Museum of Art (32.100.82).
28. While relining their Portrait of a Young Woman (A 3036), now attributed to Giovanni Battista Moroni, the Rijksmuseum found the Carpio monogram and inventory number 841 with the attribution to Caracciolo on the verso of the original canvas.
29. This picture passed through Christie's, London, on December 8, 1989, lot no. 100, attributed to an associate of Perugino (Fig. 66).
30. Once owned by Robert von Hirsch, Basel, and sold by him at Sotheby's, June 20, 1978, lot no. 115, as El Greco. It had remained with the Duques de Alba probably until the beginning of the nineteenth century. The number 933 is painted on the back of the panel.
31. Possibly Giordano's Rape of Deianira in the Galleria Regionale della Sicilia, Palermo (813). Its companion, Neptune Chasing a Nymph, also in Palermo, is probably no. 947 of this document.
32. Probably Giordano's Neptune chasing a Nymph in the Galleria Regionale della Sicilia, Palermo. See previous Note.
33. It appears that either this picture or no. 995 of this inventory is the Madonna and Child with an Angel (Madonna del Latte) (Fig. 67) in the Szépművészeti Múzeum (55), Budapest. The dimensions given in both descriptions, 3 x 2½ Roman palmi, are roughly equal to 66.9 x 55.75 cms., compared to 68.5 x 56.81 cms. for the Budapest picture. There are two Correggios in Carpio's 1689 Madrid inventory (Doc. 115, nos. 1104 and 1105) that may also be identified with these works. The values given for these paintings are exceptionally high. Interestingly, Carpio also owned a copy of the Madonna del Latte which appears in his 1687 Neapolitan inventory (see Doc. 114, no. 42). This picture (Fig. 68) was at Christie's, London, in 1989 and has the Carpio monogram and Neapolitan inventory number on the reverse.
34. See Note for no. 987 of this document.

The postmortem inventory of Andrés de Villarán (d. 25 March 1683), a knight of the Order of Santiago and member of the council of the royal treasury (Consejo y Contaduría Mayor de Hacienda), was drawn up by his executors, the licenciado Don Lucas Rebollo, mayordomo of the convent of the Magdalena at Alcalá de Henares, and Don Pedro Fernández de Pradilla, contador (royal accountant), in Madrid beginning on 28 March 1683. The executors nominated the painter Antonio Palomino to value Villarán's collection of paintings, which he undertook on 1 May 1683.

Villarán's collection contained five paintings associated with Anthony van Dyck (nos. 7, 13, 19, 28, 31), but Palomino considered only one – an Incredulity of St. Thomas (no. 7) – an original. However, a copy of the Mystic Marriage of St. Catherine (no. 28) was said to be “very well made” and was valued at the same amount as the original.

The collection contained a Virgin of the Almudena by the royal painter Juan Carreño de Miranda (no. 16). Carreño was also named as the author of a St. Onofre copied after Jusepe Ribera (no. 6), which, judging from their respective valuations, Palomino considered a much better painting than another anonymous copy of a St. Francis (no. 26) after Ribera. In the case of Villarán's three compositions by Pedro de Orrente (nos. 10, 17, 23), however, one of the copies, a Triumph of David (no. 10), was considered more valuable than an original Holy Family by the same artist (no. 23). This may not have been based simply on its quality, but may also reflect the number of figures it contained. Like many of his peers, Villarán also owned a copy after the work of Titian (no. 15) and a Correggio that was also most likely a copy, being valued at only 150 reales (no. 1).

Although Villarán's collection contained relatively few landscape paintings, two were distinctive enough to be listed as copies after Benito Manuel Agüero (no. 5), and there was a Flemish work (no. 56). He seems to have enjoyed paintings of the sea, however, and the valuation listed a port scene by Juan de Toledo (no. 57), two seascapes by an unidentified Italian(?) painter (no. 2), as well as several anonymous items.

Villarán appears to have had a particular taste for the works of Antonio de Pereda, owning two paintings of saints by him (nos. 8, 29) and two religious histories of the Imprisonment of St. Peter (no. 32) and Moses and the Plague of Serpents (no. 40). However, the most highly valued picture by Pereda was a Vanitas still life (no. 44), called “Gerolífico del desengaño” and clearly an important example of a genre that Pereda made his own. While the painting contained the traditional symbols of death, a skull and clock, an ironic twist was given to the subject by the inclusion of artists' materials, a palette, brushes, and papers.<sup>1</sup> In Palomino's valuation, this painting was worth more than a flowerpiece and fruit still life by the Flemish specialist Alexander Adriensen (nos. 41, 42) and another painting whose description suggests it may have been a trompe l'oeil (no. 34).

Pedro Núñez de Guzmán, Conde de Villaumbrosa and Marqués de Montealegre

Don Pedro Nuñez de Guzmán, Marqués de Montealegre, Conde de Villaumbrosa, “del Consejo de Estado de SM, Presidente de el de Castilla y la Junta del gobierno de esta monarquía en la menor edad,” died 29 November 1678. His estate was partitioned among Montealegre’s widow, Doña Maria Petronila Niño Enriquez de Porres Guzmán, Condesa de Villaumbrosa y Castronuevo, and their children, Don Martín de Guzmán, Marqués de Montealegre y de Quintana; Don Garcia de Guzmán, Knight of Santiago; and Doña Francisca de Guzmán, Marquesa de San Damian. Paintings are listed in the estate, ff. 899–909v, and were inherited by Don Martín de Guzmán, Marqués de Montealegre, ff. 1013v–1015v, and by the Marquesa de San Damian, ff. 1038v–1043v, as well as by the widow, ff. 1075v–1076v. The attributions to Valdés Leal, Díaz, Orrente, and Van der Hamen suggest an interest in the contemporary Spanish school more in keeping with middle-class collections, while copies after Van Dyck, Rubens, and Titian sum up the influences on the school of Madrid after about 1640.

Catalina Vélez de Guevara,
Condesa de Oñate y Villamediana and Marquesa de Guevara
1685

The inventory and valuation of the estate of Doña Catalina Vélez de Guevara, Condesa de Oñate y de Villamediana, deceased, were drawn up by her son, Don Iñigo Vélez de Guevara y Tasis, Conde de Oñate. Her paintings were inventoried (ff. 22v–34v) on 23–25 October 1684. The valuation of goods (ff. 9–339) began 5 March 1685, with the paintings appraised on 7–21 March 1685 by Juan Carreño de Miranda, Pintor de Cámara de Su Magestad. Don Iñigo and his brother Beltrán Manuel de Guevara y Tassis, General de las Galeras de Sicilia y Nápoles were the heirs of the estate.

There are two sets of original numbers given in the document. The first set (900 – 1100 range) seems to have been assigned when the valuation was made; they appear for the most part in sequential order in the document transcribed here. The second set of numbers (200 – 400 range) appears to have been assigned in the inventory. This second set of numbers appear again – but in a random manner – in subsequent lists (made in 1688) of good received by each son.

Some interesting items of note are the set of 55 pictures of different games attributed to David Teniers (the younger) (no. 153) with the high value of 12.100 reales; and the equestrian portrait of the Conde de Oñate entering Naples ascribed to Ribera (31).

The postmortem inventory of Don Juan de Echauz (d. 7 June 1687), a knight of Santiago, was drawn up by his widow Elena María de Benavente, with the paintings collection inventoried on 26 June 1687 (ff. 198–205v) and valued between 21 and 22 August by the painter Jerónimo Ezquerras (ff. 318–336).

The collection included a full-length portrait of the collector himself as a young man (no. 45), along with portraits of Charles II as a child (no. 57) and king (no. 13), as well as a pair of images of Philip IV and Queen Isabella of Borbon (no. 42, and probably no. 55), and other members of the royal family. One of the more valuable paintings in the appraisal of Echauz's collection was Christ at the Column by Bartolomé de Cárdenas (no. 17). In the early part of the century, this artist had been painter to the Duque de Lerma and was made painter to the city of Valladolid in 1622, but had died more than fifty years before the inventory. The fact that his name was remembered at all suggests that the painting was prominently signed or had been a particular favorite of its owner for devotional or aesthetic reasons. The only other attributed works included a series of Flemish battles by Jan Snellinck I (no. 1), which were complemented by other battle paintings in the collection (nos. 2, 3, 11), and whose military theme was perhaps considered appropriate for a collector who was also a knight of the military Order of Santiago. There were two copies of Titian's famous Ecce Homo and Mater Dolorosa (no. 28) from the Spanish royal collection, and a number of perspectives (no. 6), a landscape with ruins (no. 60), and four still lifes (bodegones) (no. 58), painted in Italy. The only clearly identified mythological narrative in the appraisal was a painting of Venus and Adonis, an "ordinario" copy after Rubens (no. 46), probably derived from the prototype which is today in New York (Metropolitan Museum).

Don Gaspar's death inventory, taken at Naples in 1687, displays none of the careful attention to attributions and other details that characterized the Roman inventory of 1682 (Doc. 109). Attributions are infrequent, valuations are given only for the pictures sent to Spain, and certain paintings known to have been in the collection are not identified. (For example, Pinacci painted a portrait of Don Gaspar that was subsequently engraved. No mention of Pinacci is made in the 1687 documents.) In addition, some 200 works seem to have been sent to Spain without having been recorded in either the Rome 1682 or the Naples 1687 documents, as we learn from the Escorial shipping lists.<sup>1</sup> Some of these works might actually have been commissioned before Don Gaspar left Rome, others may have been bought by agents remaining behind in Rome, and some may have come from Neapolitan sources. All we know, however, is that Don Gaspar arranged to have them shipped during his viceregal tenure, along with many other of his prized possessions.

Nevertheless, a number of the most famous extant pictures identified among Don Gaspar's holdings were acquired by him in Naples. For example, Don Gaspar managed to obtain Raphael's Alba Madonna from the Olivetani fathers – we can only imagine by what combination of threats and offers (no. 84; now Washington, National Gallery 1937.1.24, Fig. 70). This panel was taken to Spain, where it remained in the Carpio-Alba collection until the death of Doña Cayetana, Duquesa de Alba, in 1802.<sup>2</sup>

In addition, the inventory includes large numbers of objects including reliquaries, jewels, statues, silver, and objets d'art (Pages (not ff.) 3–18), as well as fine furniture, clocks, vases, bronzes, and crucifixes, etc. (Pages 19–28) (some bear numbers from the 1682 inventory).<sup>3</sup> Pages 28–91 list the paintings, of which nos. 1–1162 correspond to the pictures inventoried in 1682; additional works (purchased after 1682?) bring the total number of pictures to 1,592. The paintings were inventoried from 9 to 23 December 1687.<sup>4</sup>

Pages 91–107 record more silver, textiles, hangings, furniture, precious stones, and a portable chapel with (detachable?) architectural elements. Pages 107–108 list 53 slaves, some of whom are specified as being Christians, and give the names of those responsible for each slave. Pages 108–110 record painted textiles hanging in the garden; pp. 110–130 inventory 36 carriages, 3 caleses, as well as saddles, etc. Pages 130–179 record a library of approximately 1,000 titles (many more volumes), inventoried 11 to 20 January 1688. Pages 100–101 describe some sort of portable or demountable theater “per far[e] comedie,” with its equipment. The inventory continues with miscellaneous items to p. 187, dated 20 February 1688.

1. El Escorial Palace Library, ms. &-IV-25, these works are noted in the transcription in Burke 1984, vol. 2, Document 4.10; when a piece does appear in the 1682 or 1687 inventories, it is annotated there.

2. F. Rusk Shapely, Catalogue of the Italian Paintings, National Gallery of Art (Washington, 1979), vol. 1, no. 24, p. 387.

3. Cited by Berwick and Alba 1898 and 1924; cited extensively and published in part in Pita Andrade 1952 and 1960; also cited by Harris 1957 and many others.

4. Apparently all of Carpio's pictures recorded in the Rome 1682 or Naples 1687 documents had inventory numbers and Carpio's monogram painted, carved, or branded on the reverse. Although the 1682 Rome inventory numbers generally match the first 1162 items described in this inventory, there are some differences. At least one picture was recorded with different numbers in the Rome and Naples inventories; this is Domenico Tintoretto's Venus with the Three Graces. It appears as number 465 in Rome and 1406 in Naples. We know this for certain because the picture, now at the Art Institute of Chicago (1929.914), had the numbers 467 (an error for 465) and 1406, as well as the monogram DGH painted on the back of the old lining. Some pictures have surfaced in public collections with the Carpio monogram and an inventory number below 1162 that cannot be found in the 1682 Rome inventory under the corresponding number. These include such works as: Pasqualino de Rossi Holy Family with St. John the Baptist (DGH 194), Pinacoteca Nazionale, Ferrara (no. 97); and Tintoretto Portrait of Ramón Llull (DGH 6), Museu Nacional d' Art de Catalunya, Barcelona (no. 24206). One may only surmise that these numbers correspond to the portion of the 1687 Naples inventory that is not transcribed here. See also Carpio's 1651 Madrid inventory (Doc. 49, no. 145) for some evidence of corresponding inventory numbering of Carpio's Madrid collection. Maria L. Gilbert has provided information on this and many other possible identifications of the inventoried objects in the Carpio collection. Other works with the Carpio monogram but no inventory number include: Tintoretto Portrait of a Cavalier, Museu Nacional d' Art de Catalunya, Barcelona (no. 24244) and a copy after Ottavio Leoni Portrait of a Woman, Musée d' Art et d' Histoire, Chambéry (no. 362). These works have not been conclusively identified with any in the Carpio inventories transcribed here.

5. This picture surfaced at Colnaghi's as Bartolomeo di Giovanni (and Augustino Ciampelli?) as reported by Mauro Natale (written correspondence to the Provenance Index, December 1996).

6. Now attributed to Giovanni Antonio Fasolo, Portrait of a Lady (Fig. 69) in The Art Institute of Chicago (1946.382); it has the DGH mark surmounted by a crown with the corresponding inventory number 1167 painted on the back.

7. This picture has been identified by Mauro Natale (written correspondence to the Provenance Index, December 1996) as Scarsellino's Martyrdom of St. Venantius of Camerino in the Sarah Campbell Blaffer Foundation, Houston.

8. This picture passed through Christie's, London, on December 15, 1989, lot no. 68, as a seventeenth-century Italian copy after Correggio (Fig. 68). In the following year, it was at Armondi Antichità in Brescia as by Correggio(?). See also Note for no. 988 of Doc. 109.
9. This picture, which has Carpio's monogram and the inventory number 1216, is now in a private collection in England and attributed to Tintoretto.
10. Raphael's Alba Madonna (Fig. 70) in the Washington National Gallery (1937.1.24) was passed to Carpio's daughter Catalina, the Duquesa de Alba, and stayed in the family until ca. 1802.
11. The Penitent Magdalen (Fig. 71) is now in a private collection in Princeton, and has the Carpio monogram as well as the inventory number 1364 written on the panel's reverse. Although the inventory describes this work as being on slate, it is actually on wood.
12. Domenico Tintoretto, Venus and Mars with Cupid and the Three Graces in a Landscape (Fig. 58), The Art Institute of Chicago (1929.914). Inscribed on the reverse of this canvas is the Carpio monogram DGH, as well as the inventory numbers 467 and 1406 (Fig. 59); see also Doc. 109, no. 424.
13. In 1936, this picture was included in R.W. Goulding's Catalogue of Pictures belonging to the Duke of Portland as attributed to Raphael. Goulding's description mentions the DGH monogram and 1508 on the reverse.
14. Now called copy after Raphael, Lorenzo de' Medici (Fig. 72), in the Szépművészeti Múzeum (6783), Budapest. In a letter of 2 March 1994, the curator István Barkóczy describes the Carpio mark and inventory number 1580 as being burnt into the back of the picture.

In addition to the posthumous Neapolitan inventory published above (Doc. 114), an inventory of his possessions in Madrid was made in 1689. This document offers valuable information on Don Gaspar's household in the years between his return from exile and internment in Portugal and his departure as Ambassador to Rome. For example, the inventory indicates that, during this period, Don Gaspar occupied four principal residences: the Jardín de San Joaquín, the villa at Moncloa, a house in the parish of San Martín, and a dwelling attached to the Convent at Loeches. The house at San Martín contained only portraits and large decorative pieces, none of which bore attributions. The inventory gives little indication that this house was in daily use in 1689, and the paintings mentioned might merely have been those whose quality did not justify the bother of removing them.<sup>1</sup>

The Jardín, on the other hand, was probably Don Gaspar's principal residence. The inventory describes the contents of several alcobas, or bedrooms, along with galleries and a small tower (f. 1030ff.). The Jardín was also the main repository of the art collection; indeed, the density of the hanging scheme suggests a museum more than a home. The villa at Moncloa, apart from the frescoes, held little of interest. Only a few works of quality were recorded at Loeches or as having come from Loeches, although there were many pieces in crates (lo encajonado, f. 1042v and ff.). Finally, the inventory describes a "portable oratory" at the end of the list of works at Loeches. This was decorated with Titian's Via Crucis (no. 1092) and Penitent Magdalene (no. 1098), and possibly with Don Luis's Cardinals de' Medici, still attributed to Raphael (no. 1099). Since Loeches was the seat of the Olivares, it is worth asking whether some of these may come from the collection of the Conde-Duque.

It has been noted that the 1689 inventory appears to lack many works present in the inventories of 1648 and 1651. The most probable explanation for this – apart from the difficulties of identifying works from varying written descriptions – is that Don Gaspar was refining his collection. There is evidence that, on at least one occasion, such a winnowing did take place. On 1 June 1674, the Imperial Ambassador, Harrach, visited an almoneda at one of the Carpio residences:

In the afternoon I went incognito to visit the Venetian Ambassador, and from him to the almoneda of the Marqués de Liche – although there was almost nothing on sale except pictures, and most of them only copies, if from good originals.<sup>2</sup>

Don Gaspar had already been named Ambassador to the Holy See by April 1674, but he had not yet left Madrid. His appointment to Rome may have necessitated a sale to raise money for the embassy. It may have been, therefore, an appropriate moment for a general housecleaning. The exclusion of furniture and the low quality of the works offered for sale support this.

Unfortunately, the lack of a death inventory for his father, Don Luis, makes it impossible to say how many of the works inventoried in 1689 but absent from the inventories of 1648 and 1651 (or the supposed list of 1661) were actually acquired by Don Gaspar. The documentary evidence is further confused because Don Gaspar sent numerous works back to Madrid from Italy before his death in 1687.<sup>3</sup> Occasionally we can trace the history of a picture, such as Veronese's Susanna and the Elders (no. 94), which Don Luis inherited from the Conde de Fuensaldaña (1651, no. 32).<sup>4</sup>

Don Gaspar's estate was heavily burdened by debts (some inherited from his father), and, to judge from letters sent by agents from Naples to his daughter and heir, his Italian possessions were in disarray.<sup>5</sup> Sales were ordered in both Naples and Madrid. As we have noted in the Introduction, the Madrid almoneda alone dragged on for seven years and passed through the hands of at least two receivers.<sup>6</sup> Unfortunately, there have been no shipping records located for the period 1687–90; it is therefore difficult to know exactly which pictures were sold in Italy and which were sent to Spain after Don Gaspar's death.

The Madrid almoneda is of interest both for its general historical value – the price of silver in vellón currency is given, as well as the price of a slave – and for the light it casts on the dispersion of art in seventeenth-century Spain. Many of the transactions in the almoneda were not, strictly speaking, sales, but rather transfers of disposable property to creditors of the estate. Thus, close relatives such as the Conde de Monterrey and the Marqués de Almarza (Don Gaspar's brothers) received pictures in payment of claims presumably generated by bequests in Don Gaspar's will.<sup>7</sup> A number of convents, including those of Santa Isabel and San Nicolás in Valladolid, received pictures, perhaps in lieu of bequests or previous obligations undertaken by the Carpios. Other creditors – Antonio de Villanoel, Pedro de Azcona, Azcona's heirs, Isabel Casier, Gabriel de Mesa, Juan Pérez Farinas, Isabel Firmento, and Bartolomé Garrido, to name a few – were apparently trying to collect old debts. The most unusual recipient of Don Gaspar's pictures was Pedro Rodríguez, the Carpio's gardener, who was ceded, among other works, Velázquez's Philosopher in lieu of back wages.<sup>8</sup>

One particularly important group of paintings was transferred to the royal collection in payment of claims made by the king's household (hacienda). These claims were possibly due to a type of estate tax or perhaps to debts incurred by Don Luis. Among these pictures was a set of panels by Rubens, painted as models for the Eucharist tapestries that Isabella Clara Eugenia commissioned for the Convent of the Descalzas Reales in Madrid.<sup>9</sup> Also from Rubens' hand were a Sacra Conversazione and a Mystic Marriage of St. Catherine valued at 16,500 reales each (nos. 264 and 493). Other pieces in the group included a Nocturnal Nativity, a Flight into Egypt, and four scenes from the life of Christ by Bassano;<sup>10</sup> an unidentified Pietà by Annibale Carracci (no. 180, valued at 60,000 R.); a group of flower pieces by "El Teatino" (that is, Daniel Seghers, nos. 394, 395, 402, 403, 404); two works by Ribera; one by Tintoretto (no. 355); five by Titian (nos. 36, 41, 55, 486, 561); and five by Veronese (nos. 371, 473, 477, 483). Of four paintings given to Van Dyck, three were of St. Rosalia (nos. 123, 276, 278),<sup>11</sup> and the fourth work was of St. Francis in Ecstasy (no. 283).<sup>12</sup>

1. It is not clear whether this house may be identified with the one Don Luis leased from the Duque de Uceda.
2. Harrach 1913, p. 96 (entry for 1 June 1674). The original German is given above in the notes to the almirante's collection, Document 43.
3. AHPM, Prot. 2.819, ff. 740-1201; El Escorial Palace Library, ms. &-IV-25.
4. The picture is probably not the work in the Prado, no. 483, which seems to have been inventoried in the royal collection in 1666.
5. Palacio de Liria, Madrid, Alba Archive, caja 162-21.
6. AHPM, Prot. 9.893, ff. 191-221; Prot. 9.819, ff. 1176-1180; Palacio de Liria, Madrid, Alba Archives, caja 221-2.
7. See Pita Andrade 1960a, pp. 409-410.
8. No. 211 in the 1689 Madrid inventory (Doc. 115). The painting is now in Rouen (López-Rey 1963, no. 76, p. 147). See Pita Andrade 1952, p. 236.
9. Prado nos. 1695-1702; cf. Prado 1972, pp. 587-591, and AHPM, Prot. 9.819, ff. 1176-1180.
10. The Flight is possibly now in the Prado, no. 40, attributed to Leandro Bassano.
11. None of these may be identified with a work in the Prado, no. 1494, since, according to Prado 1972, p. 189, that piece was in the Escorial. A second canvas by Van Dyck of this subject in the Prado (no. 2556 - bequest of the Conde de Pradere) may, however, be one of the Carpio pieces.
12. Probably the picture now in the Prado (no. 1478).
13. Massimo Stanzione, Woman in Costume with Rooster (Fig. 73), The Fine Arts Museums of San Francisco, on permanent loan from the Hispanic Society of America, (L41.1.2).
14. This picture may possibly be identified with Titian's Saint Margaret (Fig. 74) in the Heinz Kisters Collection, Kreuzlingen, Switzerland. It is known to have left Spain (the royal collection) as early as 1639 when it was inventoried in Charles I's collection, but the description, high value, and dimensions make it a possibility. "Dos Varas y terzia algo mas de Caida y dos de ancho" equal 1.96+ x 1.68 cms. vs. the Kisters' picture's 1.98 x 1.676 cms.
15. Now attributed to Domenico Campagnola, and identified as Venus rather than Diana (Fig. 17), this picture is presently owned by Alex Wengraf Ltd., London. See D. Bull and E. Harris, "The Companion of Velázquez's Rokeby Venus and a source for Goya's Naked Maja," The Burlington Magazine, 1986, no. 1002, vol. CXXVIII, p. 643ff. It appears to have inspired Carpio to commission the Rokeby Venus as its pendant.
16. Velázquez's Rokeby Venus (Fig. 16), London National Gallery (2057). See also Doc. 49, no. 221.
17. This picture is identified by R. Ward Bissell in Orazio Gentileschi and the Poetic Tradition in Caravaggesque Painting as the work in the Museo de Bellas Artes, Bilbao.
18. Sold to Carlos II in 1691, this picture still resides in the royal collection (Prado No. 1.545) as Van Dyck (or Jordaens) (Fig. 75).
19. Now Visc. Bearsted collection, Upton House, near Banbury, England (255). A version that appeared at Christie's in 1992 was erroneously identified as having a Carpio provenance, but the Bearsted painting (Fig. 76) has the Carpio monogram DGH on the reverse.
20. Velázquez, Democritus (Fig. 77), Musée de Rouen, France (822.1.16).
21. See Doc. 49, no. 177. This picture is now in the Alba Collection (No. 183) and is considered a copy after Van Dyck. It is also found in the inventory of Gaspar's father Luis in 1647.
22. Studio of Rubens, Portrait of Archduke Albrecht (Fig. 49), Windsor Castle (ACC 612559). See A. Vergara, "Don Rodrigo Calderón y la Introducción del Arte de Rubens en España," Archivo Español de Arte, 267 (1994), pp. 275-283. This picture appears again in Carpio's Madrid inventory of 1651 (see Doc. 49, no. 207).

29. Velázquez's Prince Baltasar Carlos in the Riding School (Fig. 42), now in the collection of his Grace the Duke of Westminster, appears earlier in the collection of Don Gaspar's father (see Doc. 45, no. 124).
30. Juan Bautista Martínez del Mazo, Las Meninas (Fig. 84), Kingston Lacy, Dorset (The National Trust).
31. Veronese, Christ and the Centurion (Fig. 26), Prado (492).
32. Jonathan Brown has suggested that this might be Rubens' Minerva protects Pax from Mars (Peace and War) (Fig. 85), London National Gallery (46). There was also a design by Rubens depicting Abundance and Wealth for the triumphal arch made for the visit of the Cardinal Infante Fernando to Antwerp, but no oil painting is known to have been executed.
33. This seems to be a smaller version of Rubens' Quos Ego! in Dresden. The present picture measures ca. 252 x 308 cms. vs. the Dresden painting's 326 x 384 cms.
34. Rubens, The Triumph of Divine Love (Fig. 86), Prado (1.700).
35. Rubens, The Triumph of the Church (Fig. 87), Prado (1.698).
36. Rubens, Santa Clara with the Fathers and Doctors of the Church (Fig. 88), Prado (1.695).
37. This is now tentatively attributed to Hendrik van Balcn and is a copy after Rubens, Virgin and Child with Saints (Fig. 48) in the Prado (1.703). See Carpio's earlier Madrid inventory where this picture also appears (Doc. 49, no. 167).
38. Rubens, The Four Evangelists (Fig. 89), Sudeley Castle, Gloucestershire.
39. This is possibly Titian's Saint Catherine of Alexandria at Prayer (Fig. 47) in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts (48.499), which is discussed in the essay preceding Doc. 49.
40. This appears to be a copy or another version of Titian's Sacred and Profane Love. It is listed in Carpio's 1682 Rome inventory as well (Doc. 109, no. 862) where it is called a copy by Carracci after Titian. The original work is in the Borghese collection.
41. This picture appeared with Edmund Peel & Asociados, Madrid, on October 30, 1990, lot no. 6, attributed to Hendrik van Somer (Fig. 90).
42. This is likely to be El Greco's The Adoration of the Name of Jesus (Fig. 91) now in the London National Gallery (6260), although the dimensions differ somewhat (84 x 28 cms. vs. the London picture's 57.8 x 34.2 cms.). It is considered to be the companion of El Greco's El Expolio which also appears in this inventory (see no. 192).
43. Correggio's Mercury Instructing Cupid Before Venus ('The School of Love') (Fig. 5) now in the London National Gallery. It seems to have had the highest value of any painting in a seventeenth-century Madrid private collection.
44. See Note for no. 988 of Doc. 109.

The title of Conde de Peñaranda de Bracamonte was conceded to Don Alonso de Bracamonte y Guzmán (Santiago) on 31 January 1602.<sup>1</sup> The fourth conde, Don Gregorio de Bracamonte, whose inventory is presented here, achieved Grandeza in 1676. The family title is today linked with that of the duchies of Osuna and Frías, but during the 1600s the Bracamonte family was closely allied by marriage and personal relationships with the Olivares-Carpio faction at court in Madrid as well as with the powerful Spinola and Colonna families.

The third conde, Don Gaspar de Bracamonte y Guzmán, was a testamentario of the will of the Marqués de Leganés in 1655 and is found linked with Don Luis de Haro in a number of other documents of the period. Carducho had already cited the young Gaspar de Bracamonte as a collector and friend of the arts in 1633.<sup>2</sup> The Peñaranda collections were presumably augmented by Don Gaspar's assignment to the Viceroyalty of Naples, 1658–1664. As we have seen (Introduction), Don Gaspar, before leaving Italy, bought 39 pictures from the collection of the Marchese Giovanni Francesco Serra di Cassano, a Genoese general who had fought for Spain. In typical Olivares-Carpio fashion, the pictures were bought to be given to the king, including for use at the Escorial. It is interesting to compare the remarkably high quality of the Serra pictures (most of which are now in the Prado) to the works in the Peñaranda personal collection documented here. One must also recall the Conde de Peñaranda's documented patronage of Andrea Vaccaro and Luca Giordano.<sup>3</sup> Harold Wethey cited a supposed eyewitness account (relayed by the historian Abate Vincenzo D'Onofrio) to the effect that Peñaranda departed Naples with "1500 colli grandiosi."<sup>4</sup> All of this suggests that the collection may have been dispersed before the 1689 inventory or only partially represented therein.

The inventory of D. Gregorio Genaro de Bracamonte y Guzman, 4th Conde de Peñaranda, who died 8 December 1689, was drawn up by his widow, Doña Agustina Spinola Colonna, Condesa de Peñaranda, and by Don Francisco de Medrano, presbítero, beginning in Madrid, 13 December 1689, with the paintings inventoried on 29 January 1690 (ff. 558v–578v).

Juan Gaspar Enríquez de Cabrera, Duque de Medina de Ríoseco and Almirante de Castilla

In 1647, Juan Gaspar Enríquez de Cabrera inherited one of the largest Spanish collections of paintings from his father, Juan Alfonso Enríquez de Cabrera, the 9th Almirante de Castilla. Although Juan Gaspar, the 10th Almirante de Castilla, continued to acquire paintings, his activity as a collector consisted primarily in preserving, curating, and enhancing the collection.

Juan Alfonso had amassed most of the collection during his years of service to King Philip IV. He had been mayordomo mayor to the king in the 1630s. In 1641, he was appointed Viceroy of Sicily, and in 1644, Viceroy of Naples, a position he held until 1646. His years in Italy gave him the opportunity to acquire Italian paintings and commission copies of some of the masterpieces of the Cinquecento, including a copy of Titian's Martyrdom of St. Lawrence (I Gesuiti, Venice). Not surprisingly, Juan Alfonso emulated the king's taste in his collecting practices. Consequently, Venetian paintings by Titian, Tintoretto, and the Bassani made up the largest and most valued part of the collection. In addition, he collected works from the Neapolitan school by Stanzione, Novelli, Falcone, and the Spaniard Jusepe de Ribera. The inventory taken after his death in June 1647, numbered more than 1,400 works, of which approximately 938 were paintings. Only the collections of Philip IV, the Marqués de Leganes, and the Marqués del Carpio included a greater number of paintings. Like most Spanish collections, the majority of the works were religious. There were also numerous landscapes, seascapes, and battle pictures; many of these were by Neapolitan painters such as Aniello Falcone and Viviano Codazzi.

Unlike his father, Juan Gaspar never took an appointment abroad and would remain at court his entire life. In 1669, he was appointed to the Council of State by Charles II, and in 1683 was named caballerizo mayor. The 10th almirante rarely attended a meeting of the Council of State, but instead dedicated himself to cultivating a refined life at court, sponsoring splendid banquets, theatrical performances, and informal literary and artistic gatherings in his palace. A lover of the arts, Juan Gaspar wrote satiric poetry as well as two books, one on the art of bullfighting. Toward the end of his life, in 1683, he founded the convent church of the Discalced Franciscans known as San Pascual Bailón. Some of the best pictures in the collection, including five paintings by Ribera and two works by Guercino, were used to decorate this church, where he would be buried on September 25, 1691.

Although most of Juan Gaspar's activity as a collector revolved around the organization and supervision of the collection he inherited from his father, bills of sale confirm that he continued to acquire paintings. In a sale of 1675, the 10th almirante purchased several works by Veronese. This was an important addition to the collection, since his father had given most of his paintings by this artist to the king sometime before his 1647 death inventory was taken.

With these and other additions, the 10th almirante formed a kind of casa museo or house museum in his residence in the Paseo de Recoletos.<sup>1</sup> Such an extensive collection required careful attention, and during the early 1670s Juan de Alfaro was employed as painter to the almirante.<sup>2</sup> His duties included restoration, as well as the creation of original works – mainly portraits, and some small landscapes – for the collection.<sup>3</sup> The 1691 inventory reveals that a large part of the collection was hung according to schools of painting and subject matter, with each room given a specific title. Although other contemporary collectors hung their paintings according to separate schools or genres, none of their inventories contain systematic room headings. This suggests that the titles in Juan Gaspar's inventory were probably official or formalized titles familiar to the notary who drew up the inventory and to Claudio Coello, who appraised the paintings. The titles of the rooms are the clearest reflection of the make-up of the collection, since the 1691 inventory rarely gives attributions for individual paintings. From it, one learns that there were individual rooms for Raphael, Tintoretto, Rubens, Titian, Bassano, Ribera, Pedro Orrente, and “Spaniards.” Interestingly, Ribera, who was considered “the little Spaniard” by the Italians, seems to have been singled out from the “Spaniards” because of his Italianate qualities, as was Orrente – because of his Bassanesque qualities. In addition, there were rooms with genre titles: the “Pieza de Paisés,” or plain landscapes, is distinguished from the “Pieza de Perspectivas,” which would have displayed landscapes with architecture, such as those by Codazzi. The “Pieza de Españoles,” or “Room of Spaniards,” included paintings by the leading Spanish artists such as Juan Carreño de Miranda, José Antolínez, Juan de Cabezalero, Antonio de Pereda, and Francisco de Herrera (the younger),<sup>4</sup> all of whom met regularly at the 10th almirante’s house to discuss artistic issues. Antonio de Pereda’s Desengaño de la Vida (Kunsthistorisches, Wien, no. 771) can be identified as item no. 95 owing to the detailed and unique description.<sup>5</sup> Considering that Spanish collectors traditionally paid little attention to the national school in their collecting pursuits, the 10th almirante’s “Room of Spaniards” reflects a markedly different attitude. It is for his patronage of the Spanish painters that Palomino upheld the 10th almirante as a model patron in his Lives of the Eminent Spanish Painters and Sculptors.

The 10th almirante’s dedication to every aspect of his collection warranted the highest praise not only from his Spanish contemporaries, but also from foreign visitors. After touring several collections in Madrid, the Imperial Ambassador Ferdinand Harrach noted in his diary entry of 16 May 1674 that the collection of the 10th almirante was one of the best he had seen and that it could even be considered equal to that of Prince Leopold Wilhelm.<sup>6</sup>

The 1691 inventory of the 10th almirante’s collection was taken upon orders from the Crown with the intention of auctioning it in order to pay off his heavy debts. Although the inventory was completed, the sale never took place, and the collection was inherited by his son, Juan Tomás, the 11th Almirante de Castilla. When the War of Spanish Succession broke out in 1702, Juan Tomás went to Lisbon to join forces against the Bourbons, leaving behind most of his possessions. At this point, the collection that had been in the family for more than seventy years was confiscated by the state and later dispersed.

The inventory was taken from 25 September 1691, the day of the owner’s death, to 21 October 1691, (legajo 498–3, ff. 3–168) by his sons, Don Juan Thomas Enríquez de Cabrera, the successor, and Don Luis Enríquez de Cabrera, Marqués de Alcañizas.

The paintings were appraised by Claudio Coello, beginning on 19 November 1691. Coello follows the detailed descriptions of the inventory but offers few attributions. Folios 337–38 provide a tasación del Jardín; ff. 376–93 contain an evaluation of the statues. The tapestries are appraised among the fine textiles (ff. 242–97).

In his Lives of the Eminent Spanish Painters and Sculptors, Palomino specifically mentions works by each of these artists (except Cabezalero) in the almirante's "Hall of the Eminent Spaniards," see 1987 edition, pp. 206, 232, 272, 275. Cabezalero is described as having executed a ceiling picture depicting "God the father with some putti holding up the world" in the almirante's chapel, next to the Augustinian Recoletos, p. 223.
5. This particular picture was probably purchased by his father Juan Alfonso, the 9th Almirante de Castilla. See Doc. 43, no. 368 "un respice finem con quatro cavezas de Muertes," and Jordan and Cherry, Spanish Still Life from Velázquez to Goya, London 1995, p. 79–80.

See Vergara "The 'Room of Rubens' in the collection of the 10th Admiral of Castile," Apollo, vol. 140, no. 396 (1995), p. 38, note 18. There is a copy of this work in the Gemäldegalerie, Berlin (779), and another is presently on loan at the Rubens Huis, Antwerp. See also the Marqués del Carpio's Madrid inventory of ca. 1651 (Doc. 49, no. 298) which could be a copy of the Vienna picture.
12. Vergara, 1995, suggests that this is Rubens' Switzer, his Mistress, and a Satyr (Fig. 97) in the Palazzo Bianco, Genoa. A picture of this subject appeared in Rubens' Specification (posthumous sale), and Muller points out (in Rubens: The Artist as Collector, 1989, pp. 112–113) that there is a possibility that the Genoa composition originally had full-length figures, and was subsequently cut down. The dimensions given here are 196 x 136 cms., whereas the Genoa panel measures 128 x 140 cms.

15. This picture seems to be the painting by Ribera donated by the 10th Almirante de Castilla to the Church of the Convent of San Pascual in Madrid (see Doc. 43, no. 361).
16. This is most likely Ribera's Hecate (Fig. 33) now in Apsley House, London. See also Doc. 43, no. 37.
17. This is possibly a copy after Raphael's The Holy Family "dell'Impannata" in the Prado (313).

The postmortem combined inventory and valuation of the estate of Don Manuel Ponce de León, Duque de Arcos, was drawn up by his son and heir Don Joaquín Ponce de León, Duque de Arcos, and was begun at court on 5 December 1693. The appraisal of the paintings collection was undertaken by the painter Alonso del Arco on 16 January 1694, with the picture frames valued by a carpenter and a gilder.

The first 15 paintings listed in Arco's valuation were large hunting scenes, two of which were explicitly stated to be original works by the Flemish painter Paul de Vos (nos. 1, 5). Ten of the paintings were denoted as originals and three as copies (nos. 7, 8, 12), although all of the paintings were valued at roughly the same amounts, around 1,000 reales each.

Some of the best-known Spanish artists were represented among the religious paintings in the Arcos collection, including Luis de Morales (no. 26) and El Greco (nos. 21, 22, 60). Two paintings were by younger artists; one was a Susanna and the Elders by Antonio de Pereda (no. 81), and another was the Virgin of the Sagrario by Carreño de Miranda (no. 23). A portrait of Father Charles Spínola (no. 62) may have been painted by Andrés Smidt in Madrid between 1660–80. There were examples of some specialized genres, including a perspective of the Roman Campidoglio by Viviano Codazzi (no. 19), a grape still life by Juan Fernández El Labrador (no. 41), and flowerpieces by Mario dei Fiori (no. 42). In addition there were five depictions of the sugar factory at Manilva (nos. 55, 76, 77), one of which (no. 76) was a highly valued painting, worth 8,000 reales plus 150 reales for its frame.

One of the more unusual features of this valuation of Arcos' collection is the consistent discrimination between original paintings and copies. Remarkably, the number of copies slightly outnumbered the number of original. The valuation included 12 copies after paintings famous old masters such as Titian (no. 49), Veronese (no. 82), Bassano (no. 52), and Correggio (no. 36), as well as El Greco (no. 60). Others were after seventeenth-century Italian painters, Guercino (no. 57), Mola (no. 59), and Stanzione (no. 78), with two copies after a Ribera, a philosopher (no. 58) and a version of his Apollo and Marsyas (no. 110). There were two further copies after as yet unidentified artists (nos. 50, 75). Only in the case of one picture were the authors of both original and copy identified: a "portrait" of Venus copied after Titian by Juan Bautista del Mazo, which was not valued very highly (no. 109). In this document, anonymity was the rule. Indeed, in the case of 37 paintings denoted as "originals" the author is not mentioned. More curious still, 53 paintings specified as "copies" mention neither the author of the prototype nor the copyist. If this term "copy" here literally referred to a painting reproduced from another, perhaps more famous, source, then it seems remarkable that a collector of the status of the Duque de Arcos would have been content to own so many of them.

The postmortem inventory of Don Juan de Castañeda (d. 12 July 1694), Maestro Mayor de la Ciencia de las Armas de sus Caballeros Pajes del Rey, was drawn up by his executors, Don Agustín de Silva, Grefier de la Casa de la Reina Madre, and Don Francisco Tovarra. His paintings were valued on 3 August 1694, by Antonio Palomino.

Like many distinguished collections of the day, Castañeda's included copies after some of the most renowned foreign artists of all time. There were paintings after Bosch (no. 46), Andrea del Sarto (no. 38), Titian's Entombment (no. 6), Rubens (no. 53), and Van Dyck's Deposition (no. 50), on which was placed the highest valuation. Only one copy after a Spanish hand was listed in the collection (no. 51). However, Palomino's valuation does record a remarkable collection of some of the best Spanish artists active in the capital during Castañeda's lifetime.

Palomino himself was represented by a Guardian Angel (no. 16), which, it seems, was paired with a St. Michael by José Antolínez (no. 16). There were also four examples of Antolínez's landscape painting (nos. 29, 35). Although six religious paintings by the royal painter Francisco de Herrera the Younger were listed in the collection (nos. 11, 12, 13, 25, 32, 34), the other royal painters Juan Carreño de Miranda and Francisco Rizi are highly conspicuous by their absence. Perhaps Castañeda was as partisan in his taste as Herrera was in life, deciding to collect the works of a gifted but difficult artist who was notoriously scathing about his rivals at court.

The relatively small collection also included a painting of a sheep by Francisco de Zurbarán (no. 36). This painting, which probably represented the bound Agnus Dei, may have been painted by Zurbarán during his final years at court. The only painting listed by Antonio de Pereda was a Vanitas still life (no. 28). This was a genre in which the artist excelled, and Castañeda's painting had a counterpart in the near contemporary collection of Andrés de Villarán (Doc. 110 no. 44). There were original religious subjects painted by Antonio Arias (no. 8) and a now obscure artist Alonso de Mesa (ca. 1627–1668) (no. 49) mentioned in Palomino's Lives.<sup>1</sup> The short-lived artists Juan Antonio de Frías y Escalante (nos. 1, 22) and Mateo Cerezo (no. 7) were also represented. A copy of Cerezo's Mystic Marriage of St. Catherine (no. 51) complemented the version by Escalante (no. 1) in the collection. Castañeda owned four religious compositions (nos. 4, 10, 20) and four perspectival paintings (no. 54) by Matías de Torres, which rivalled in numbers those by Herrera. While it is not known how this collector acquired the works in this document, if they were the result of commissions to living artists, Castañeda would have to be counted among the major patrons of his time.

Don Sebastián de Cotes y de la Cárcel was a revered legal expert and was consequently called upon to draw up King Carlos II's will. As a courtier and a member of a group of highly placed royal officials in the first years of the new Bourbon dynasty, Cotes was able to collect some 85 pictures by the time of his death in early 1703. His art collection was probably one of the last non-noble collections formed in Hapsburg Spain. This included both Italian and Flemish pictures, with particular emphasis on the Neapolitan school represented by artists such as Ribera and Andrea Vaccaro.

The explanation of this interest may be found in the eight works attributed to Luca Giordano, who had left Spain to return to his native Italy in 1702. Among the paintings attributed to Giordano are a Perseus with the Head of Medusa and a full-length Portrait of King Charles II. Since the inventory was taken so soon after Giordano's departure, we may assume that the works were either acquired directly from the artist in the course of his activities in Madrid and at the Escorial, from the artist at the time of his departure, or from court sources very close to the artist. In any case, the inventory suggests that Giordano, in addition to his work for the crown, may have cultivated other patrons during the interregnum brought about by the death of Charles II.

The valuation of the paintings was based on an inventory taken beginning 30 January 1703, in anticipation of an almoneda.<sup>1</sup> The tasador was Francisco de Leonardoní, "Pinttor de su Mag.<sup>d</sup>," and the main beneficiary was Don García Manuel de Cotes y Morelos. The executors and witnesses were hidalgos ("Don ...") and court functionaries or members of royal councils.

The inventory of the licenciado Don Juan Antonio de Vicuña (d. 23 February 1710) was drawn up by his widow Paula Manrique de Castro, who had his paintings collection valued by the painter Baltasar de Gamba on 4 March 1710 (ff. 480–485v). This was predominantly a collection of religious images, with a small number of secular subjects that included landscapes, still lifes, battles (some of which were painted in Flanders [no. 5]), and a disembarkation scene (no. 54). The only historical subject was a Burning of Troy, paired with an Old Testament battle painting (no. 11), and a painting of Diana and Actaeon copied after Titian (no. 57), probably from the famous poesia in the royal collection. This was the only mythological subject in the collection. Four of Vicuña's paintings were copies after Rubens (nos. 16, 17, 20), and three of these were in the form of precious small paintings on copper. One of Vicuña's paintings of saints was possibly by Juan Bautista Mayo (no. 2), while another was painted by Luca Giordano (no. 10), most probably during his years in Spain. The Immaculate Conception by the Sevillian painter Francisco de Zurbarán (no. 12) typified the devotional subjects that this artist painted for private collectors during his late career at court, 1658–64.

The postmortem inventory of Don Diego Jaraba (d. 22 April 1716), Organista Mayor de la Real Capilla, was begun by his widow Teresa Núñez de Rivadeneira on 29 April 1716. His picture collection, inventoried between 14–18 May, comprised some 105 paintings, mostly of religious subjects on canvas and other supports, including panel, copper, stone, and glass. Five pictures were listed as being from the oratory (nos. 57–61). The high proportion of religious subjects perhaps reflected Jaraba's devout nature, appropriate for the organist of the royal chapel. Although almost all of the paintings had frames made of carved and gilded wood or ebony, the absence of attributions and appraised values for the pictures makes it difficult to assess the paintings' quality. The document lists 21 pure landscapes, and three overdoor landscapes with birds and animals (nos. 5, 6). Jaraba also appears to have enjoyed landscape paintings with religious subjects, of which he owned many examples. A set of six saints in landscapes were described as being painted on alabaster panels (no. 52). Although no mythological narratives with large figures were listed, Jaraba did own a group of four "fables" also in landscape settings (no. 48).

Jaraba's collection of portraits directly reflected his long career in royal service. There was a portrait of Philip IV (no. 1), another of his widow, Mariana of Austria, the Queen Mother (no. 2), and one of the popular prince Don Juan José de Austria (no. 2). Perhaps some contact with the papal court explained his portrait of Pope Innocent XI (no. 31). One family portrait was a full-length of Jaraba's uncle, the "Ciego de Daroca" (no. 4), who was perhaps also a musician. Surely, however, one of the most prized pictures in his collection was a large work representing Jaraba himself giving a clavichord lesson to Charles II's queen, María Luisa of Orleans (1679–1689), a work that celebrated the sitter's professional success and status at court. Unfortunately, the author of this remarkable portrait was not named in the document.

Don Andrés de Medrano y Mendizábal (Seville 1654–1720 Madrid) became a Knight of Calatrava in 1690. He enjoyed a distinguished career in the administration of King Charles II; he was nominated Secretario de Estado y del Despacho in 1691 and appointed a member of King Charles II's Council of Castile on 30 March 1697. He inherited the title of Conde de Torrubia in 1695 from his brother, Don García de Medrano. Medrano had married Francisca de Angulo y Arbizu, daughter of Don Juan de Angulo, knight of Santiago, in 1693 and the contents of his picture collection are known from the document of estate, between his widow and other heirs, dated in Madrid on 12 August 1724.<sup>1</sup>

Medrano owned a portrait of King Charles II, and of the regent, Mariana of Austria (d.1696). His collection was made up almost entirely of religious paintings, including a picture by Mateo Cerezo of the miraculous statue of Christ from Burgos (no. 16). There was a set of images of Sibyls, battle scenes and landscapes. The list of paintings in the partition document of Medrano's estate is headed by a picture of the Nativity of Christ (no. 1) by Luca Giordano, which carried the highest value in the collection, matched only by an unfinished work by El Greco (no. 19). While Medrano could have acquired his picture of St. Michael (no. 61) by Antonio de Pereda before the artist's death in 1678, and his picture by Giordano from the artist himself, he may have inherited some of the older works by El Greco (nos. 39, 40) and copies after Titian (nos. 22, 42) and Ribera (no. 32).

Don Nicolás González de Villa (d. 3 August, 1726) was a member of the king's Council of State and secretary of the Real Junta de Obras y Bosques, concerned with the management of the royal properties. On his death, his postmortem inventory was drawn up by his widow Doña Ana María Renxifo y Guemez, and in the valuation of his property his paintings collection was appraised by the painter Pedro Calabria Escudero (5 September 1726). González de Villa's paintings had been valued by the painter Antonio Palomino in the inventory of his capital drawn up on his marriage of 28 February 1711.

The collection was biased towards Italian art, including copies after old masters, such as Correggio (no. 36) and Titian (no. 26), and original works by Sassoferrato (no. 35), Andrea Vaccaro (nos. 20) and Paolo de Matteis (no. 18). The only Spanish work attributed in the valuation was a copy after a Holy Family by Juan Antonio de Escalante (no. 15), which was worth one-third the value of the similar subject copied after Correggio (no. 36).

The most remarkable aspect of this collection is the owner's admiration for the works of Luca Giordano, a prolific artist who must have produced many works for collectors during his time at the Spanish court between 1692–1702. González de Villa owned ten original paintings by Giordano, two works from his studio, "hechas en casa de Jordan" (no. 21), as well as a pair of copies after the artist (no. 23). One painting depicted the particularly "Spanish" subject of the Immaculate Conception (no. 2) and all of the remaining works were biblical and religious subjects carrying high values; a pair of large paintings of the story of Moses, which may have contained many figures, were valued highest in the group at 6000 reales (no. 16). Moreover, the collection of Giordano pictures reflected different aspects of the painter's practice; original subjects, two sketches (no. 19) and two paintings in which the artist imitated the style of Titian (no. 17) and Tintoretto (no. 3). Giordano's imitation of Titian was valued at 1,500 reales, while an anonymous copy after Titian (no. 26), was valued at just 120 reales.

Albuquerque

Doña Ana Rosalia Fernández de la Cueva Enríquez Díez de Acero y Armendáriz, Condesa de la Torre, de Ledesma y de Huelva, Marquesa de Ladrietta y [dowager] Duquesa de Albuquerque was the widow of Melchor Fernández de la Cueva y Enríquez, 9th Duque de Albuquerque, Capitán General de la Armada Real del Mar, de los Consejos de Estado y Guerra de Su Majestad. The valuation of the paintings was drawn up between 4–11 February 1727, by Don Baltasar Gambazo, a painter.<sup>1</sup> The following transcription makes use of the partition for reasons of greater legibility.

The works inherited by her son Francisco Fernández de la Cueva y Fernández de la Cueva, 10th Duque de Albuquerque are inventoried in Document 127.

There is only one attribution – and a tentative one at that – to Bassano (no. 4), and there are a remarkable number of pictures representing different madonna types (ca. twenty percent of the collection).

1731

Don Fernando de Meneses Bravo de Sarabia (d. 15 October 1731) was a Gentilhombre de la Cámara and, naturally, his collection included portraits of the king, probably Philip V, and his queen (nos. 57, 68). On his death in 1731, the inventory and valuation of his estate were drawn up by his widow María Ana Josefa de Montalvo y Cabrera, who had the royal painter Juan Delgado value the collection.

This collection is included here as an example of a conventional collection that was probably formed in the reign of Charles II and had remained unchanged by the advent of the new Bourbon monarchy. Although none of the paintings were attributed to an artist, a few were described as having been painted in Valencia (nos. 27, 37, 45). Two paintings were Mexican works on mother-of-pearl (no. 61) and the collection included three versions of the Mexican Virgin of Guadalupe (nos. 48, 61, 74, 79). Meneses Bravo de Sarabia's collection appears to have comprised works of variable quality, judging from the range of values given to them in the appraisal. The range of subjects was also varied. Some of the more highly valued works were among the mythological paintings, including paired paintings of gods and goddesses (nos. 66, 67) and a series of seven works depicting the story of Polyphemus (no. 80). The paintings which headed the valuation were a valuable set of large pictures of the Four Condemned, the subject of famous paintings by Titian and Jusepe Ribera in the Spanish royal collections.

Conde de Ledesma and de Huelma, Marqués de Cuéllar, and Duque de Albuquerque

The inventory of the estate of Don Francisco Fernández de la Cueva y de la Cueva, Duque de Albuquerque, Marqués de Cuellar, Conde de Ledesma y de Huelva, was drawn up following his death on 23 October 1733.<sup>1</sup> The inventory was initiated by his son, D. Francisco Fernández de la Cueva y la Zerda, Duque de Albuquerque, etc., Gentilhombre de Cámara de Su Magestad, at Madrid beginning 30 October 1733. The paintings were appraised at Madrid, 11–12 November 1733, with the tasador not specified. All pictures listed here were inherited by the Duque de Albuquerque from his mother the Marquesa de Cadreita. (See Doc. 125 for her death inventory.) Much of this inventory follows that document verbatim.

1734

The valuation of the paintings of the medical doctor Gaspar Carulli (d. 29 March 1734) was drawn up by his widow Catalina Rosa de Grandival, beginning on 3 April 1734, with his paintings appraised three days later by Juan de Miranda, painter. Although only 29 pictures were listed in Carulli's estate at this time, the document is noteworthy for the fact that all but eight works in Miranda's valuation are attributed to specific artists. Some of Miranda's attributions appear to be optimistic, such as the picture of Belshazzar's Feast by Caravaggio himself (no. 2) and game still lifes by El Greco and Pietro da Cortona (nos. 10, 7). However, the collection did include a set of six flowerpieces by Juan de Arellano (no. 13) and works by two other seventeenth-century Madrid painters: a highly valued painting of St. Augustine by Vicencio Carducho (no. 9) and a picture of the Eucharist by Juan Carreño de Miranda (no. 11).

Don Manuel de Córdoba y Verdes died on 11 March 1735 and his postmortem inventory was drawn up a week later by his widow, Nicolosa de Mata y Coronel. The valuation of his small collection of 30 paintings was undertaken by Jaime Agutt, a painter, on 22 March 1736. The most distinguished painting in this appraisal was a Sacrifice of Abraham by Murillo (no. 2), a painter who was highly admired by this date but whose works may have been comparatively rare on the Madrid market. This undoubtedly contributed to its high valuation, which was put higher than those of paintings of an equivalent size attributed, perhaps optimistically, to artists such as Van Dyck (no. 1) and Ribera (no. 9).

On the death of the architect Julian Rodríguez (d. 7 November 1738), “Professor que fue del Arte de Arquitectura,” his inventory was begun within a week by his widow Francisca de Rojas y Sobarzo, and his paintings appraised by the painter Francisco Zorilla on 23 November 1738. None of the items was attributed to particular artists in this document, although some of the pictures were assigned high valuations. The following transcription is from the most legible parts of the document of Rodríguez’s estate partition.

Juan Bautista Márquez (d. 29 December 1740) was maker of mirrors by royal appointment (Espejero de la Reina) and Ayuda de la furriera of the queen. His inventory was drawn up by his widow Josepha de Rivera. His paintings were valued on 30 January 1741 by the painter Manuel Gutierrez and included a set of portraits of the Bourbon royal family (no. 3). The attributions given in the appraisal were all to foreign artists of the previous two centuries. A painting of Mary Magdalene was considered an original by Correggio (no. 11) and sold privately. Another distinguished painting of Christ Appearing to the Magdalene (no. 12) was attributed to Van Dyck. The rest of the attributed paintings were all copies and school works, particularly the paintings of Rubens. School paintings were referred to by the term “casta,” meaning “of the type of,” but were nevertheless valuable paintings. Indeed, the work which headed Gutierrez’s appraisal was the most valuable picture, a large Martyrdom of St. Hermengild “casta de Rubenes”.

The following inventory of paintings owned by Joseph Spino y Navarro comes from the partition of his estate between his wife Da. Gerónima de Miranda y Testa and his children, dated Madrid 19 August 1744. Spino y Navarro was Grefier of the king, a complementary office of the controller of the expense accounts of the royal household. Many of the paintings in Spino y Navarro's estate came from the partition of his first wife Catalina del Mazo. She was the daughter of Baltasar del Mazo and Melchora de Savedra, the former being one of the sons of the painter and son-in-law of Velázquez, Juan Bautista del Mazo (1610/1612–1667).<sup>1</sup> Unfortunately, few of the paintings in the collection were attributed. Six works by Alonso del Arco (no. 89), Simón de León Leal (nos. 96), Luca Giordano (no. 31) and Gabriel de la Corte (nos. 25, 84) all formed part of the inheritance of the widow, Jerónima de Miranda. The most valuable and distinguished painting in the collection was the Portrait of the Family of Juan Bautista del Mazo now in Vienna (Fig. 99), which came from the estate of Catalina del Mazo.

1. See the testament of Catalina del Mazo y Velázquez of 13 April, 1707 at AHPM, Prot. 12.201, fols.478–479.

2. Many of the paintings in Spino y Navarro's collection came from the partition of the estate of his first wife, Catalina del Mazo Velázquez, a descendant of the artist Juan Bautista del Mazo. Mazo's The Artist's Family (Fig. 99) is now in the Kunsthistorisches Museum (320), Vienna.

The postmortem estate inventory of Francisco del Olmo (d. 28 October 1746), Knight of Santiago, a royal secretary and Gobernador del campo, was opened in Madrid on 31 October 1746, with the paintings valued by the painter Hipólito Obivan a month later, on 30 November 1746, for the partition of the estate. A pair of portraits of King Charles II and his queen in Olmo's collection (nos. 18) were attributed to Juan Carreño de Miranda and suggest that Olmo may have first entered royal service during his reign. However, he may also have inherited these paintings, as he did a picture of the Entombment of Christ by Alonso del Arco (no. 35) and a large and valuable painting of the Mystic Marriage of St. Catherine by Mateo Cerezo (no. 10). The most important group of paintings were eight works by Luca Giordano (nos. 1, 12, 26, 30, 31, 32, 34), one of which was damaged (no. 1).

- [51] Un lienzo largo que contiene todo el Misterio del Calbario 300

The combined inventory and valuation of the estate of Ysabel María de la Cruz Ahedo, Marquesa de Ugena, was drawn up by D. Francisco Miguel de Goyeneche, Knight of Santiago, Conde de Saceda, Gentilhombre de Camara de Su Magestad y Tesorero de la Reina and other executors, beginning Madrid 15 June 1747. The extensive collection of paintings was valued for sale between 16 and 19 June 1747, by Joseph Romero, a painter. Among the attributed pictures were works by eight Spanish painters; Luis de Morales (no. 4) and El Greco (no. 2), Alonso Cano (no. 89), Claudio Coello (no. 43), and an unknown artist Ignacio Blasco (no. 20). A Murillo genre painting of a poor person delousing himself (no. 16) is reminiscent of a painting of this subject by the artist in the Louvre; however, it is unclear what is meant by a “Pintura de dibuxos” by Zurbarán (no. 82). Jusepe Ribera, the Spanish painter of greatest international renown, was represented by five paintings in the collection (nos. 5, 46, 48, 86, 87), including two copies after his compositions (nos. 49, 76). Paintings attributed to Spanish hands were outnumbered by those given to foreign artists, a number of which were copies. The more valuable of these included a Pietà by Titian (no. 3), a mythological subject by Guercino (no. 31), works by Giordano (nos. 29, 60) and highly valued paintings by Rubens (nos. 1, 10, also no. 99 with Jan Fyt). Copies after Rubens (no. 81), Pietro da Cortona (no. 45), and Poussin (no. 75), were also given relatively high valuations.

Manuela Petronila Quevedo y Azcona was the widow of Luis de Salazar y Castro, a Knight of Calatrava and member of the Consejo de Su Majestad en el Real de las Ordenes, Comendador de Zurita, Coronista Mayor de Castilla y de las Indias. She died in 1748, and her inventory was begun 15 January 1748 and resumed 18 January 1748. Antonio González, Director de la Real Academia de la Pintura, appraised the pictures, hence some knowledgeable attributions. Margherita Caffi has her only mention in this publication with two flowerpieces (no.43), and there is a Lucas van Leyden Madonna and Child (no. 13). Gonzalez also identified a copy of a Holy Family by Rubens (no.2) and three copies after Guido Reni (nos. 1, 6, 9), two of which were depictions of St. Cecilia and Susana at her Bath. A painting of St. Bartholomew, perhaps depicting his martyrdom, was said to be an original by Ribera (no.27) and there were original paintings by Charles II's royal painters Antonio Palomino (no.20) and Luca Giordano (no.25). The most valuable works in the collection were an Adoration of the Kings by Dürer at 6.000 reales (no.5) and a flowerpiece by D.Seghers (called "el Teatino" in the document) at 3.000 reales (no.7).

Miguel de Zuaznabar (d. 15 April 1750) was a member of the royal council of Finance, the Consejo de Hacienda, and Ayuda de Cámara y Jefe de la Guardaropa del Príncipe. The postmortem inventory and valuation of his estate was opened on 30 April 1750, when, in order to avoid costs, it was decided to follow the earlier inventory/valuation of his deceased wife Ana María de Soroa (d. 11 June 1743) drawn up nearly seven years earlier. Thus, the valuation of paintings from Zuaznabar's estate, dated 6 July 1750, follows exactly the original valuation of the paintings by the royal painter Andrés de la Calleja of 25 June 1743. On 7 July 1750, Zuaznabar's widow, Francisca Antonia de Zuaznabar, ordered a new inventory and valuation of remaining goods from her husband's estate, which included some paintings valued by Andrés de la Calleja but not included in the original document.

Andrés de la Calleja was Pintor de Cámara to Philip and responsible for restoring paintings from the royal collection damaged by the Alcázar fire of 1734. Zuaznabar's collection included two of his portraits of unidentified Infantes (no. 6), as well as a pair of religious subjects by another royal painter of the Bourbon dynasty, Miguel Jacinto Menéndez (no. 27). One of the most interesting aspects of the collection, however, was the presence of paintings by major artists of the Madrid school of the previous century, including Antonio de Pereda (no. 22), Carreño de Miranda (no. 29), Sebastian de Herrera Barnuevo (nos. 8, 9), and a valuable picture by Juan Martín Cabezalero (no. 5). A painting of the Holy Family by Claudio Coello was paired with a representation of Charity by Luca Giordano (no. 7). The high value of a painting by Murillo of San Francisco de Paula (no. 3) is testimony to the esteem in which works by this Andalusian master were held by collectors in the eighteenth century. The highest value, however, was reserved for a large painting of the Rest on the Flight into Egypt by Jusepe Ribera (no. 1), which was placed at the head of the inventory.

The inventory/valuation of Julian Moreno de Villodas (d. 5 April 1751), Secretario Mayor y Más Antiguo del Ayuntamiento de Madrid, was drawn up by his widow María Manuela Gutierrez Carriazo and his son Antonio Moreno y Negrette, Knight of Santiago and Regidor Perpetuo de Madrid, beginning 6 April 1751.<sup>1</sup> His paintings were valued on 7 April 1751, by the royal painter Andrés de la Calleja. While it is to be imagined that Calleja was able to distinguish the hands of different artists, some of the attributions in the inventory seem overly optimistic. A number of genre paintings were given to Velázquez (nos. 23, 24, 35, 38) and a miniature by Michelangelo (no. 10), depicting the Rape of Ganymede was probably a painting based on a copy of a drawing, such as the one Pacheco mentioned in the collection of Don Francisco de Tejada.<sup>2</sup> However, there is no reason to question the attributions to Spanish artists.
