Biographical/Historical Note

Sir Charles Fellows (1799-1860) was an English explorer and archaeologist, best known for his expeditions in Asia Minor, especially in the district of ancient Lycia, in present-day Türkiye (Turkey). His first journey to this area in 1838 led to the exploration of ruins in the ancient town of Xanthus. The publication in 1839 of his journal of this expedition aroused great interest, particularly at the British Museum, which requested that he bring artifacts back to England on subsequent voyages. The museum helped arrange a royal decree or firman from the Sultan to enable Fellows to claim Lycian architectural remnants and sculptures. The firman was obtained in 1842 while Fellows was on his third expedition to the area. At the end of that year he shipped 78 cases of architectural remains and sculptures from Xanthus to the British Museum. In 1844, he extracted an additional 27 cases of artifacts.

Eventually, Fellows's relationship with the British Museum Trustees changed from one of mutual support to a battle over the design of the display of the Xanthian marbles. Fellows argued that the artifacts should be arranged according to scholarly principles, and bitterly criticized the display the sculptor Sir Richard Westmacott produced for the museum, which favored a picturesque effect.

Fellows published several accounts of his travels and discoveries in Lycia. In his publication The Xanthian Marbles (London: John Murray, 1843), he sought to correct what he viewed as mistaken rumors or accounts related to his acquisition of the marbles. His other publications include The Inscribed Monument at Xanthus (1842), An Account of Discoveries in Lycia (1841), and his first, A Journal Written during an Excursion in Asia Minor 1838 (1839).

Scope and Content of Collection

The Charles Fellows correspondence consists of autograph letters, drafts of letters, notes, and inventories written and received by the British archaeologist. Fellows's letters include detailed descriptions of his archaeological expeditions to Lycia, and Xanthus in particular, with references to the Harpy Tomb and the Nereid Monument which were acquired by the British Museum. The letters and documents primarily date from 1820 to 1879 with the bulk dating from 1839 to 1852, but there are also files of undated letters and notes.

Fellows's letters and notes, several written from Asia Minor, detail his expeditions, the attempt to obtain permission to ship architectural remnants and sculptures from Xanthus to London, travel arrangements, discussions with other scholars, and arrangements with his creditors. Some letters provide an exchange of information about language and wildlife, especially birds and insects, in Asia Minor. There are inventories itemizing the sculptures, building fragments, and objects excavated from archeological sites. Lists of accounts and letters reflect cash spent on salaries and equipment during his expeditions, as well as the bookbinding costs and book sales of Fellows's publications in London, most of which were issued by the publisher John Murray.

Letters to and from Fellows, dated after 1842, reflect his dispute with the Trustees of the British Museum over the display of the Xanthus marbles at the museum. He argued for an arrangement based on scholarly principles and against the exhibition design by the sculptor Sir Richard Westmacott. There are letters from and to staff and associates of the British Museum, including Henry Ellis, Principal Librarian; Josiah Forshall, Secretary; William Hamilton, Trustee; Edward Hawkins, Keeper of Antiquities; Anthony Panizzi, Librarian; and John Payne Collier, Secretary of the Royal Commission on the British Museum.

Numerous letters from Fellows are drafts and are addressed to unidentified recipients. Fellows corresponded with the English naturalist Edward Forbes, the Austrian orientalist Joseph, Baron von Hammer-Purgstall, the architect Robert Hesketh, who accompanied him to Xanthus, the topographer William Martin Leake, and the photographer William Henry Fox Talbot. Letters to and/or from other experts, scholars, and diplomats include: Charles Bankhead, British Embassy, Pera; John Barlow, Royal Institution; Aleksander Chodko; Friedrich Wilhelm Eduard Gerhard, Royal Museum, Berlin; John Edward Gray; Major Rohde Hawkins; Robert H. Inglis; Christian Lassen; Frank Pearson; Robert Peel; Ambrose Poynter, Royal Institute of British Architects; Désiré Raoul-Rochette, Bibliothèque royale, Paris; and Daniel Sharpe.

Sir Charles Fellow died in 1860. Letters dated after 1859 were likely sent to his second wife, Harriet Fellows, whom he married in 1848, and who bequested a collection of watches to the British Museum. One letter received by Lady Fellows is from John Charles Robinson, Secretary, Fine Arts Club, London; another is from the Prince of Leiningen.
